McCormic: Crises await incoming mayor

■ Corydon residents could consider dissolving town

By Frank Boyett
fboyett@thegleaner.com

Corydon will have a new mayor Nov. 7 and the current mayor wants him to be prepared for serious problems that face the small town of about 700 people. Those problems are not the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, but Mayor Hilda McCormic said they are severe enough to give her nightmares during her waking hours and to keep her up at night. The solution, she said, might be to dissolve Corydon city government. “It doesn’t make sense for me anymore for us to survive as our own entity,” she said, but she stressed “that’s my personal opinion” and doing it would require a vote of the people. And residents might be resistant to such radical change, especially considering the controversy that has torn the town apart in recent years. “I will be happy on election day,”

There is the Herman Alles for the history books: Furniture store owner, Henderson native, Holy Name of Jesus Catholic Church member. And then there is the Herman Alles that Dorothy Edwards captured on film: Stooped, animated, surrounded by love. “Herman is a character,” the junior at Western Kentucky University said on Wednesday. “He is one of those elders that loves to tell you stories. He has so much to share.” So while Alles typed on a typewriter, his hands showing the signs of each of his 90 years, Edwards stood above, snapping photographs on Wednesday. When Alles met with his employees at Alles Brothers Furniture, she was right there,

Festival gives Lane a loving thumbs up

Lane Goodwin would be pleased. The 13-year-old Calhoun resident, formerly of Henderson, who died Wednesday from a rare form of cancer, was honored by hundreds on Saturday at a fall festival held at the Henderson County Fairgrounds. “We promised him we’d do this,” said Henderson County resident Jennifer Skaggs, a longtime friend of Lane’s mother, Angela Watkins-Goodwin. Skaggs and another friend of Watkins-Goodwin, Stacy Eshbaugh, organized the event. “(The festival) is about making his dream come true ... to find a cure,” Skaggs said. The funds from this year’s festival will not be used for cancer research, she said. The funds will go to the family “to help with medical bills,” she said. The festival is expected to be an annual event, and organizers said they hope that next year’s proceeds will be used to support the Thumps Up for Lane Childhood Cancer Foundation, which was established by Lane’s mother. The festival kicked off at noon Saturday and within minutes, people were pouring into the fairgrounds to show support for a youngster whose courage touched so many. In fact, it could safely be said that Lane’s story inspired thousands all over the world. Roughly three weeks ago, Lane and his family were informed that noth-

Horses? Some say they’ve got nothing on a good mule

Take a mellow fall day, a colorful rural setting, a high-stepping mule named “Jerry,” and a can of cold lemon-lime soda, and you have a recipe for “life is good” perfection. It’s for sure Union County native Mary Beth Greenwell, Jerry’s owner, sees it that way and she and the mule presented such a great image that Henderson banker and active community volunteer Darrell Lovell couldn’t resist snapping a photo. He emailed it to me, explaining it was taken

Gleaner staff

A Webster County woman died Saturday from injuries she sustained in a two-vehicle collision Friday night in the 7000 section of U.S. 41-Alternate, about two miles south of Kentucky 425.

Authorities said Diana Hunt, 64, Sebree, died Saturday morning at St. Mary's Medical Center in Evansville, where she'd been flown for treatment after the accident.

Also injured in Friday night's accident was the driver of the second vehicle, 47-year-old Robert Nunnally, 2879 Smith Staples Road.

The Henderson County Sheriff's Office said Nunnally was flown to Deaconess Hospital in Evansville. Nunnally was listed in satisfactory condition at Deaconess Hospital in Evansville Saturday.

The accident occurred around 7:30 p.m. when Nunnally was traveling north on U.S. 41-Alternate in a 1992 Chevrolet Silverado, officials said.

Nunnally told authorities he was passing another vehicle when he crashed head-on into Hunt's 1996 GMC Jimmy, which was southbound, the sheriff's office said.

The impact from the crash sent Nunnally's truck across the road, where it rolled down an embankment, authorities said. Hunt's vehicle also traveled down an embankment where it hit a concrete culvert, officials said.

Pioneer of bone marrow transplants is dead at 92

The Associated Press

E. Donnall Thomas, a physician who pioneered the use of bone marrow transplants in leukemia patients and later won the 1990 Nobel Prize in medicine, has died in Seattle at age 92.

The Fred Hutchinson Cancer Research Center announced the death Saturday. A spokesman said the cause was heart disease.

Thomas' work is among the greatest success stories in the treatment of cancer. Bone marrow transplantation and its sister therapy, blood stem cell transplantation, have improved the survival rates for some blood cancers to upward of 90 percent from almost zero.

This year, about 60,000 transplants will be performed worldwide, according to the Hutchinson Center.

Relay for Life kickoff meeting set for Tuesday

Gleaner staff

The kickoff for the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life takes place at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday in the lobby of the Citi Center Mall.

Teams can sign up for campsites in the spring based on the order in which they have registered.

The registration at the kickoff is $75, afterward it will be $100. According to relay organizers, this year's theme is "Celebrating 100 years of the American Cancer Society."

Teams are encouraged to pick a film from the last 100 years or a decade of films to use throughout the next year as a theme, culminating in the campsite's decorations at the 2013 Relay For Life on June 7-8.

Organizers said teams work all year to raise money in the fight against cancer.

"Relay For Life is a terrific opportunity to make a real difference in the fight against cancer," said Jo Ann Brock, chairwoman of the event. "We have a lot of fun planning (Relay For Life). We invite all past teams to join us again this year, and we would love to see some new faces as well."

Commission to hear details on gas contract

■ Property code language may get final reading

By Frank Boyett
270-831-8342

When the Henderson City Commission meets Tuesday it will consider yet another contract with the Public Energy Authority of Kentucky Inc.; similar past contracts have resulted in large savings for the city's natural gas customers.

The contract is part of a 30-year gas agreement with Morgan Stanley Capital Group. PEAK will issue the bonds to fund the gas purchase from Morgan Stanley.

The city commission is being asked to authorize the contract between PEAK and the city. It sets out the rights and obligations of both parties and establishes procedures for charges and billing, as well as miscellaneous other matters.

Gerald Ballinger, the general manager of PEAK, will be present to answer any questions from commission members.

The commission has a relatively brief agenda Tuesday, which will begin at 5:30 p.m. in the top-floor meeting room of the Henderson Municipal Center. Other items on the agenda include:

Property maintenance: The commission will consider final reading of an ordinance cleaning up language in the city's property maintenance code.

The changes will allow the city to use both civil and criminal penalties for violations. Civil penalties will run from $10 to $1,000, and criminal penalties will range from $10 to $500 and possibly include jail time. Each day a violation exists is considered a separate offense.

Bus funding: The commission will consider authorizing a grant application to the Federal Trans-sit Administration which, if approved, would provide $649,109 toward helping the city's HART bus system operate.

The request is $61,169 more than the amount the city got last year. The money is considered crucial to keeping the city bus system operating.

Sidewalk: The commission will consider accepting maintenance responsibility for 165 feet of sidewalk constructed by III Square Apartments at 501 Harding Ave.

United Way offers grant funding for fresh approaches to area needs

Gleaner staff

The United Way of Henderson County is soliciting innovative approaches that provide priority human service needs in the local community.

Among the new and creative programs seeking funding assistance are the following areas of need:

■ Education: Helping Children and Youth Achieve their Potential.

■ Income: Promoting Financial Stability and Independence.

■ Health: Promoting Healthy Lifestyles.

The local United Way will accept requests for proposals for grants in connection with programs and/or services specific to the above referenced areas of need to any tax-exempt, nonprofit human service organization that offers innovative approaches to these social problems.

Special consideration will be given to collaborative programs among multiple service providers as well as to programs previously funded and still eligible for United Way of Henderson County Venture Grants.

The application deadline is Nov. 19.

A volunteer committee of United Way of Henderson County and community leaders will review all applications. Applicants must be prepared to meet committee members to review their applications and to answer questions.

Funding will be made available to recipient organizations beginning Jan. 1 to cover a program and funding period of Jan. 1 through Dec. 31, 2013.

Applications may be obtained by logging into the website at www.uwofhc.org, clicking "Grant Opportunities" and choosing from the menu on the left side of that page, or by calling the United Way office at 270-826-2107.

Applications may be submitted electronically to mpeak@uwofhc.org, or mailed to: United Way of Henderson County, Venture Grants, P.O. Box 1097, Henderson, KY 42419.

Study to determine future of Purple People Bridge

The Associated Press

NEWPORT, Ky. — A northern Kentucky city has received $650,000 in state transportation funds to study whether the 2,670-foot Purple People Bridge spanning the Ohio River can support a planned $100 million hotel, retail and entertainment development.

The bridge, which was built in 1896 between the cities of Newport and Cincinnati, currently carries pedestrians across the waterway.

Community leaders are hopeful the study will show it can once again become a commercial lifeline.

The analysis is expected to be completed sometime in 2013.

Adventure camp dedication set

ROBARDS, Ky. — The Brain Injury Adventure Camp in Robards will be dedicated at 1 p.m. Nov. 4.

A reception will follow at 2 p.m. at the camp that serves those with brain injury, special needs and other disabilities, according to www.biacky.org.

The mission of the camp is to believe in and assist each person to set and reach goals beyond the expectations of self and others.

Situated on 42 acres in Henderson County, the camp is an outdoor site created to provide adventures for those with and without disabilities.

It offers a low ropes course, fishing ponds, one mile of trails, a zip line, therapeutic horseback riding, adaptive trikes, gardening, arts and more.

Groups may use the facility for team building, outdoor education and fun.

The entrance to the camp is located behind Columbia Sportswear in the 4 Star Industrial Park off Northern Star Way.

The dedication ceremony will credit Moritz Family Foundation for funding the high ropes course, Schneider Excavating for excavating the lake, and Deaconess HealthSouth Rehabilitation for funding the gazebo.

Residents are asked to notify Ellen Redding by Friday if they wish to participate in the dedication and reception. She may be reached at 270-827-8278 or eredding913@gmail.com

Climate study offers up food for thought

It has required great restraint, but I have (so far) honored a pledge to avoid commentary on the races for Henderson City Commission.

Believe me, it hasn't been easy.

Having said that, let's move on to a more mundane subject: Global warming.

I should first emphasize strongly that the following information is not necessarily indicative of my own views on the subject.

However, I do believe it is worth sharing — and a diversion from some of the political campaign pollution appearing so frequently on our television screens (primarily from congressional races across the river in Hoosierland).

Under the heading, “Seven in Ten Americans Believe Global Warming is Happening,” a news release from Yale University's School of Forestry & Environmental Studies offers food for thought.

“A new national survey finds that Americans' belief in the reality of global warming has increased by 13 percentage points over the past two and a half years, from 57 percent in January 2010 to 70 percent in September 2012. At the same time, the number of Americans who say global warming is not happening has declined nearly by half, from 20 percent in January 2010 to only 12 percent today.”

Says Dr. Anthony Leiserowitz of Yale University: “Americans' belief about climate change declined from 2008 to 2010, but have bounced almost all the way back. After the record heat waves, widespread drought, floods, wildfires, and violent storms of the past two years, Americans increasingly believe that global warming is happening.”

Here are some of the other findings in the Yale survey, which was based on interviews with 1,061 adults between Aug. 31 and Sept. 12 of this year, according to the news release:

■ “For the first time since 2008, more than half of Americans (54 percent) believe global warming is caused mostly by human activities, an increase of eight points since March 2012. Americans who say it is caused by natural changes in the environment have declined to 30 percent (from 37 percent in March)."

RON JENKINS

■ “A growing number of Americans believe global warming is already harming people both at home and abroad. Four in ten say people around the world are being harmed right now by climate change (up 8 percentage points since March 2012) while 36 percent say global warming is currently harming people in the United States (up six points since March).

■ “Today over half of Americans (58 percent) say they are ‘somewhat’ or ‘very worried’ about global warming — now at its highest level since November 2008.”

There's more to the report that, according to the news release, “is based on findings from a nationally representative survey — Climate Change in the American Mind: Americans' Global Warming Beliefs and Attitudes in September 2012.”

The survey was carried out by “the Yale Project on Climate Change Communication and the George Mason University Center for Climate Change Communication,” according to the news release.

If you would like to read more about the report, you can look for “Climate Nexus” at info@climatenexus.org.

And, puleeze, before the disbelievers unleash rebuttals, keep in mind that, as noted at the outset, I am in this instance merely a messenger who went in search of a “mundane” subject for today's piece.

Stay tuned.

Pink gloves go with dancing shoes

I grabbed a few things near the top of the old mailbag to pass along this week. The first comes from Ashley Sides Johnson, manager of marketing and public relations at our own Methodist Hospital.

After an editorial appeared on this page last week promoting the 2012 Pink Glove Dance Competition now under way at www.pinkglovedance.com, Ashley pointed out that Methodist Hospital employees have a video entered in the contest that you can watch and vote for.

Designed to support the fight against breast cancer, the contest features health care workers from all around the country dancing to a song called “Down” by Jay Sean. And, of course, everybody in the videos wears pink gloves.

Medline Industries Inc., an Illinois firm that's reported to be the nation's largest privately held manufacturer of those gloves, is backing the contest, and the prize is a cool $10,000. Ashley reports that if the Methodist Hospital crew were to come out on top, the winnings would go to the Komen Foundation to support breast cancer research.

DAVID DIXON

EDITOR

I checked out the local video and got a kick out of it. There's some good dancing, some enthusiastic dancing, a lot of smiling faces and a few surprises as well. A lot of people who watch will see a friend or neighbor getting their groove on for a good cause. When the pile of paperwork hits the desk at the end, I could definitely relate.

So go to www.pinkglovedance.com, scroll down to the H-K section of the list of competitors to find Henderson Methodist Hospital and have a look. After you enjoy the video, be sure to click on the “vote” button.

As the editorial said, the contest “has allowed millions of people a respite from fatigue and worry and fear, using music to bring something fresh and hopeful out of the fight against a disease that kills more women than any other, except for lung cancer ...

“If laughter is indeed the best medicine (and we're among those who believe it can have a healing effect), then dancing must be the cure — even temporarily — for feeling alone or confused or worried as you fight for life.

“And it's a fine way to celebrate your victory or that of someone you know.”

Here's a pink-gloved salute to the local hospital employees who had their dancing shoes — and their sense of humor — on for this one.

■ A news release last week reported that Kentucky and Indiana officials have finished up agreements to build, finance and manage two brand new Ohio River bridges in Louisville. Funding is expected to come from federal gasoline tax dollars and tolls on bridge travelers.

This is good news. Now maybe more attention and energy can be turned to the need for a new Interstate 69 bridge connecting Henderson and Evansville.

■ Those tired of listening to officeseekers and concerned about what officeholders really have in mind can mark their calendars: The 2013 session of the Kentucky General Assembly is scheduled to start up on Jan. 8.

It'll be a “short session” with 30 legislative days as happens in odd-numbered years. Adjournment is slated for March 26. Some might want to mark that date on their calendar as well.

■ Did you hear the one about Gov. Steve Beshear thinking about appointing his longtime political nemesis, Senate President David Williams, to a vacant judgeship? And that Williams might well accept the post if offered?

That's a creative way to break the legislative logjam that has disturbed so many Kentuckians.

If you can't beat 'em ...

Al-Qaida defeated? Not its ideology

At the Aspen Security Forum this past summer, Peter Bergen, CNN's intrepid national security analyst and a director at the New America Foundation, gave a talk titled: “Time to Declare Victory: Al-Qaida is Defeated.”

Since then, al-Qaida and/or its affiliates have launched lethal attacks on American diplomatic compounds in Libya and Yemen, hoisted an al-Qaida flag above the U.S. embassy in Cairo, resurged in Iraq, and put boots on the ground in Syria. They have bombed Christian churches in Nigeria and the mosques of Sufi Muslims in Mali. More recently, Taliban terrorists shot a 14-year-old Pakistani for the “crime” of advocating education for girls.

In this light, it seems obvious to me that reports of al-Qaida's demise are premature. And I'm not alone. “Obama was out saying, ‘Hey look, we have got al-Qaida back on its heels,’” investigative reporter Bob Woodward said last Sunday. “Well, anyone in the intelligence committee knows that's not true.”

Bergen, however, is sticking to his story. And he is not alone. On Tuesday, he and retired Lt. Col. Thomas Lynch III, a distinguished research fellow at the National Defense University, defended the al-Qaida-is-defeated thesis in a debate with Thomas Joscelyn and Bill Roggio, two of my Foundation for Defense of Democracies colleagues. Bergen and Lynch argued that al-Qaida's offensive capabilities have been degraded and that without Osama bin Laden the organization lacks a “mythical mystique.”

That's true as far as it goes. But degraded is not defeated. And Bergen goes further: “Even terrorists influenced by al-Qaida-like ideas have only killed 17 people in the United States since 9/11. About the same number of Americans are killed every year by dogs. In other words, in the United States during the past decade, dogs have been around 10 times more deadly than jihadist terrorists. ... To win World War II, Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin did not feel it necessary to kill every Nazi. We should not impose a higher standard in the battle against al-Qaida.”

Here, in my view, is what that misses: Ideas matter.

The Nazis had ideas — vile ideas, but ideas nonetheless. Not even the most rabid canines have that. Franklin Roosevelt and Winston Churchill — and Joseph Stalin, too, I suppose — were keenly aware that the Nazi threat was at least as much ideological as military.

Indeed, in January 1943, at the end of the Casablanca Conference, Roosevelt announced that he and Churchill had decided to adopt a policy crucial to Allied victory and Axis defeat — a policy, Roosevelt said, that would “mean the destruction of the philosophies in those countries which are based on conquest and the subjugation of other people.”

The jihadi philosophy/ideology is, no less than Nazism, “based on conquest and the subjugation of other people.” The late Father Richard John Neuhaus aptly defined jihadism as a religiously inspired ideology built on the teaching “that it is the moral obligation of all Muslims to employ whatever means necessary in order to compel the world's submission to Islam.”

Most Western leaders refuse even to discuss jihadism openly — much less pledge to destroy it. Some are concerned that to do so will offend Muslims by the tens of millions. Others, I suspect, find it impossible to accept that, in the 21st century, there are still those who believe in divinely endorsed wars, and see conquest as the most virtuous of pursuits. “Ideology,” Hillary Clinton said not long after becoming secretary of state in 2009, “is so yesterday.” Those who see America as the “enemy of God” are not convinced.

Proponents of the al-Qaida-is-defeated theory also ignore the fact that Saudi petro-princes continue to spend billions to globally spread Wahhabism, a strain of Islam that disdains freedom and promotes hatred of infidels and apostates.

It should be clear by now that the regime that rules Iran embraces a jihadi ideology. Iran's rulers are Shia, a minority within the Muslim world, and that makes their aspiration to lead a pan-Islamic global revolution against the West challenging. But that is their goal — a goal that will be greatly facilitated should they acquire nuclear weapons.

Roosevelt and Churchill grasped what too many analysts in government, academia, media and think tanks do not: To prevail against America's enemies, kinetic warfare is necessary but insufficient. An ideological war, a war of ideas, also must be waged. And on that front, we have not yet begun to fight.

Man in iron lung passed through Henderson in 1937

The Man in the Iron Lung passed through Henderson 75 years ago.

His name was Frederick B. Snite Jr. and he's not the only famous person to ever come through Henderson, of course. Considering U.S. 41 used to be the main highway between Chicago and Miami, and the L&N Railroad bridge was a chokepoint for north-south rail traffic, there are probably many other notable people who have passed through here over the years but their passage remains generally unknown.

But Snite is not your run-of-the-mill celebrity. It's not everyone who travels cocooned in a half-ton piece of medical equipment that allowed him to breathe 15 times a minute. But I'm getting a little ahead of my story.

Snite was born in 1910, the son of a wealthy Chicago financier. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame — where he was an athlete — in 1933 and in March 1936 he and his family were in China as part of a world cruise when he came down with polio. He was unable to breathe or speak without aid. There was only one iron lung in China at that time; Snite got it, according to an article by Dorothy V. Corson, which can be found on the college's website.

FRANK BOYETT

YESTERDAY'S NEWS

His father moved heaven and earth for 27-year-old Snite, according to an Oct. 14, 1937, story in The Gleaner, the first mention of Snite locally, which noted he was expected to arrive in Henderson at 9:18 p.m. Oct. 18 on the Dixie Flyer.

"He is being taken to Miami, where it is believed his health will improve in a new artificial respirator constructed of aluminum and rubber, which will permit him greater freedom of his arms and legs," the story said, noting the Miami trip was Snite's second long journey in an iron lung. His father paid to have him transported the 9,300 miles from China to Chicago the previous summer.

"The long trip by boat and train to Illinois is said to have cost $150,000 and was the first journey of any great distance made by a patient in an artificial respirator."

Crowds along the way to Miami gathered to gawk and to wish him well. The Gleaner on Oct. 19, 1937, noted his journey south had begun the previous day, and that Snite's train had made a short stop in Evansville, where he was greeted by a large crowd as his train was switched onto the L&N's tracks. (I'm guessing a similar crowd gathered at Union Station.)

"Easily visible from the platform, young Snite ... was apparently pleased by the large number of well-wishers who awaited his arrival here," the story said. The story described the new respirator as "a fraction of the size of the huge barrel-like device which has kept the youth alive."

Snite's father described his son as in good spirits. "He hasn't made a single complaint and jokes most of the time," the elder Snite said. "He just finished beating me in a game of chess."

The following day's

Gleaner carried another story about Snite, who had obviously captured the public's imagination. That story noted that his father had chartered four railway coaches, one of which was outfitted as a hospital car, and that his medical staff included two doctors, seven nurses and two male orderlies. And that's not counting the Swedish specialist who had been hired to test the new smaller respirator.

All told, his father said, the cost of the nearly 1,500-mile trip was about $20,000 a day — a huge amount of money back during the Great Depression. "But that doesn't matter, of course," his father said.

"The strangest tourist who ever came to Florida for the winter" arrived at his family's Indian Creek winter home on Oct. 20, according to the following day's Gleaner, and gauze-masked attendants wheeled him and the bulky equipment that kept him alive up a ramp to the second floor of the house.

For the next 17 years, until he died in 1954, Snite would be a cheerful beacon for those afflicted with polio — as well as many with other heavy burdens. He married Teresa Larkin in 1939 and they had three lovely daughters. He watched nearly every Notre Dame home football game from the sidelines in his specially built coach, and almost single-handedly brought the iron lung into the public's consciousness.

In the end he came to see his polio has part of who he was, and that it helped him accomplish God's plan for him on Earth. In a prepared statement released in 1952, he said, "The faith that brought me peace also taught me that this life is a preparation for the next. In other words, I had a job to do like everyone else. I had not been left out."

100 YEARS AGO

Lucy Bailey, for a lark, decided to dress up in her husband's clothes, which scandalized her neighbors and resulted in her being arrested. The Gleaner reported Oct. 19, 1912. "I don't see no harm in having a little fun," she told the judge when appearing in court. He ordered her to "confine yourself to feminine garments" and fined her $10. The story ran right next to a large advertisement for corsets.

50 YEARS AGO

A spectacular blaze at 801 Mill St. — the original home of Anderson Box Co. — destroyed M. Livingston Wholesale Grocery Co., as well as Eddystone Products Inc. and a large amount of the furniture inventory of Glenwood Products Inc., The Gleaner reported Oct. 16, 1962.

25 YEARS AGO

The Alcan aluminum smelter at Sebree refused to pay a 60-percent rate increase earlier authorized by the Public Service Commission, The Gleaner reported Oct. 16, 1987, but the Oct. 31 edition noted that Alcan had agreed to pay the full amount after losing a court ruling that would have allowed electricity to the smelter to be shut off.

Today in history

Today is Sunday, Oct. 21, the 295th day of 2012. There are 71 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 21, 1962, the Seattle World's Fair closed after six months and nearly 10 million visitors.

On this date:

In 1797, the U.S. Navy frigate Constitution, also known as "Old Ironsides," was christened in Boston's harbor.

In 1960, Democrat John F. Kennedy and Republican Richard M. Nixon clashed in their fourth and final presidential debate in New York.

In 1986, pro-Iranian kidnappers in Lebanon abducted American Edward Tracy (he was released in August 1991).

Ten years ago: "Jackass: The Movie" had its world premiere in Hollywood.

Five years ago: Wildfires driven by powerful Santa Ana winds killed one person near San Diego and destroyed several homes and a church in Malibu.

One year ago: President Barack Obama declared that America's long and deeply unpopular war in Iraq would be over by the end of 2011 and that all U.S. troops "will definitely be home for the holidays."

THINK ABOUT IT

"Happiness is not a horse; you cannot harness it."

Marcellus reserve larger than expected

By Kevin Begos
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH—There’s been plenty of debate over the Marcellus Shale natural gas field, but new research adds a twist that could impact political and environmental battles. Two independent financial firms say the Marcellus isn’t just the biggest natural gas field in the country — it’s the cheapest place for energy companies to drill.

One of the reports adds that the Marcellus reserves that lie below parts of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and New York are far larger than recent government estimates, while another said the powerful combination of resource, cost and location is altering natural gas prices and market trends across the nation.

The Marcellus could contain “almost half of the current proven natural gas reserves in the U.S.,” a report from Standard & Poor’s issued this week said.

Another recent report from ITG Investment Research, a worldwide financial firm based in New York, found that a detailed analysis of Marcellus well production data suggested that federal government estimates of its reserves “are grossly understated.”

The new information increases the likelihood that natural gas will be used for more and more energy needs, such as city buses, industrial use and electric power generation, according to Manuj Nikhanj, the head of Energy Research at ITG.

Philip Copeland, right, sits with attorney Frank Hancock in May 1989 as he is sentenced for the murder of New York City police Officer Edward Byrne. A campaign has grown as Copeland and three others approach a parole hearing; an estimated 250,000 letters protested their release.

NYC police, cop’s family rally against man’s killers

By Colleen Long
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Rookie cop Eddie Byrne was alone in a squad car on a cold February night in 1988, protecting the home of a witness in a drug case who had been threatened by dealers. It was about 3 a.m. when the gun flashed — five bullets were pumped into his head.

Byrne wasn’t caught in the crossfire of a shootout and he wasn’t being robbed — he was killed because he was a cop. Days earlier, a powerful drug dealer had ordered a hit from jail on any cop as payback for his arrest and offered $8,000 as a reward.

“It was an all-out assassination,” said retired officer Tony Keller, one of the first to the scene that night. “This just stunned us all. If they could kill a cop like that, no one was safe.”

The brazen killing shocked a city mired in an epidemic of drugs and violence and became a flash point that helped usher in an era of change nationwide. Next month, the four men convicted will be up for parole, a long shot, but Byrne’s family, police and politicians want to make sure they stay behind bars.

U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer, Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly and Mayor Michael Bloomberg all sent letters on behalf of the family. Last month, the police department’s largest union added to its website a form letter that can be sent to the parole board urging that convicted cop killers remain in jail. More than 250,000 letters have been sent. Hundreds went to the Byrne killers.

“We won’t let people forget about the sacrifices of those officers,” said Patrick Lynch, head of the union.

In the late 1980s, Queens was the ground zero of the crack epidemic in New York, and two drug dealers reigned, Lorenzo “Fat Cat” Nichols and his associate Howard “Pappy” Mason.

Mason directed the hit through his associate Philip Copeland. He and three others, Todd Scott, David McClary and Scott Cobb, planned it.

On Feb. 26, Scott distracted Byrne while McClary shot him. Cobb was the wheelman. Copeland was to provide the alibi.

Carrier cruises disputed Asian seas

A U.S. aircraft carrier group cruised through the disputed South China Sea on Saturday in a show of American power in waters that are fast becoming a focal point of Washington’s strategic rivalry with Beijing.

Vietnamese security and government officials were flown onto the nuclear-powered USS George Washington, underlining the burgeoning military relationship between the former enemies. A small number of journalists were also invited to witness the display of maritime might in the oil-rich waters, which are home to islands disputed between China and the other smaller Asian nations facing the sea.

The visit will likely reassure Vietnam and the Philippines of American support but could annoy China, whose growing economic and naval strength is leading to a greater assertiveness in pressing its claims there. The United States is building closer economic and military alliances with Vietnam and other nations in the region as part of a “pivot” away from the Middle East to Asia, a shift in large part meant to counter rising Chinese influence.

Dad, 4-year-old killed in shooting

INGLEWOOD — Police searched for a gunman who wore a painter’s mask when he set fire to a home before going on a shooting spree early Saturday, killing a father and his 4-year-old son and injuring a woman and two other young children near Los Angeles.

A SWAT team set up a perimeter and was using dogs to search for the attacker, who may have lived in a rear house on the property, Inglewood Police Chief Mark Fronterotta said.

Five neighboring houses in Inglewood were evacuated as officers searched residences and the trunks of cars. Other nearby residents were told to remain inside with their doors locked. The suspect was described as armed and dangerous.

Investigators were trying to determine whether he fled or remained in the house as it burned.

The man wore a painter’s mask apparently to shield his identity, Fronterotta said.

Missing woman’s body found

GRESHAM—Searchers found the body of a young Oregon woman who vanished this week on her way to work, and a neighbor has been arrested, Gresham police said late Friday night.

The body of Whitney Heichel, 21, was found on Larch Mountain, a remote, forested area east of Gresham, Police Chief Craig Junginger told a news conference.

After collecting DNA and fingerprints and conducting three interviews over three days, police arrested Jonathan Holt, 24, of Gresham, for investigation of aggravated murder, the chief said.

Holt lived in the same apartment complex as Heichel and her husband.

The Starbucks barista reportedly left for work at about 6:45 a.m. Tuesday on a drive that typically takes less than five minutes.

Her husband, Clint, called police roughly three hours later. He told investigators he tried to reach Whitney multiple times after her boss alerted him that she never arrived for her 7 a.m. shift.

Fatah-Hamas split looms over election

RAMALLAH — Palestinians voted for new local councils in dozens of West Bank towns in long-delayed elections Saturday, part of an attempt by Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas and his Fatah movement to recapture dwindling legitimacy.

However, the toxic rivalry between Fatah and the Islamic militant Hamas made it unlikely that Saturday’s voting will be followed anytime soon by overdue elections for parliament and president.

Hamas prevented voting in the Gaza Strip, the territory the group seized in 2007, and boycotted the contest in the West Bank. Hamas argues elections can be held only once Hamas and Fatah reconcile.

Fatah, though running virtually unopposed, could be bruised if party renegades defeat Abbas-endorsed candidates.

ISRAEL

Ship caught breaking Gaza Strip blockade

JERUSALEM—Israeli troops on Saturday commandeered a Gaza-bound ship that tried to break through Israel’s blockade of the Hamas-ruled seaside strip, the military said. European lawmakers and other pro-Palestinian activists aboard did not resist, and the Finnish-flagged vessel was diverted to an Israeli port.

The trip marked the latest challenge to the embargo Israel imposed after Islamic militant Hamas group seized Gaza in 2007.

The activists will be questioned and then deported to their home countries within 72 hours, said Sabine Hadad, spokeswoman for Israel’s Interior Ministry.

SYRIA

U.N. envoy presses holiday cease-fire

The international envoy to the Syria conflict pressed his call for a cease-fire with Syrian officials during a visit to Damascus on Saturday while violence continued throughout the country unabated.

Lakhdar Brahimi, who represents the U.N. and the Arab League, has appealed for a truce between rebels and President Bashar Assad’s forces for the four-day Muslim holiday of Eid al-Adha, which begins Friday. A range of countries including Iran, Iraq, Turkey and Germany have thrown their support behind the idea.

Clashes flared Saturday. The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights reported more than 40 civilians and rebel fighters killed as well as more than 20 government soldiers.

AFGHANISTAN

Police officer, cook coordinate attack

KANDAHAR — An Afghan police officer and cook poisoned their colleagues at a checkpoint in an assault coordinated with insurgent fighters that left six dead, officials said.

They poisoned two of the officers, and then the militants attacked from outside, killing the remaining four officers, Helmand Province spokesman Ahmad Zirak said.

He did not say how the officers were poisoned. The police officer was captured as he fled, but the cook escaped, Zirak added.

The gunmen escaped by motorcycle with weapons and ammunition, the governor’s statement said.

A family in the southern port city of Sidon, Lebanon, walks past flaming tires used as a roadblock Saturday to protest the death of Brig. Gen. Wissam al-Hassan, head of the intelligence division of Lebanon’s domestic security forces, in a car-bomb attack targeting his convoy.

City on edge after Lebanese official killed by car bomb

By Bassem Mroue and Elizabeth A. Kennedy
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Lebanese protesters erected flaming roadblocks and gunmen roamed the streets Saturday in a city on edge after the assassination of a top security official in a powerful car bomb the prime minister linked to the civil war in neighboring Syria.

The crisis raised a terrifying specter for Lebanese who fear their country could easily plunge back into cycles of violence and reprisal that have haunted it for decades.

Friday’s blast in the heart of Beirut’s Christian area killed eight people, including the country’s intelligence chief, Brig. Gen. Wissam al-Hassan. It was the deadliest bombing in Beirut in four years, shattering the country’s uneasy calm.

The government declared a national day of mourning for the victims Saturday, but protesters burned tires and set up roadblocks in anger.

Sharbal Abdo, who lives in the neighborhood where the bomb went off, brought his 6-year-old son, Chris, and 12-year-old daughter, Jane, to see the destruction Saturday.

“They were very afraid yesterday,” he said. “They need to face this situation. It may be their future.”

Lebanese Prime Minister Najib Mikati on Saturday linked the bombing to al-Hassan’s high-profile investigation this summer that uncovered what authorities called a plot by Syria to provoke chaos in Lebanon with bombings and assassinations.

“I don’t want to prejudge the investigation, but in fact we cannot separate yesterday’s crime from the revelation of the explosions that could have happened,” Mikati said at a news conference following an emergency Cabinet meeting.

Mikati, who opponents believe is too close to Syria and the Shiite militant group Hezbollah, offered to resign after the bombing, but was asked by President Michel Suleiman to stay.

Al-Hassan’s probe led to the arrest of former Information Minister Michel Samaha, one of Assad’s most loyal allies in Lebanon. Samaha, who is in custody, is accused of plotting a wave of attacks in Lebanon at Syria’s behest. Indicted in absentia in the August sweep was Syrian Brig. Gen. Ali Mamlouk, one of Assad’s highest aides.

Samaha’s arrest was an embarrassing blow to Syria, which has long acted with impunity in Lebanon. Syria has powerful allies here, including the Shiite militant group Hezbollah, which dominates the government.

Turmoil grips Libya a year after death of Gadhafi

By Paul Schemm
Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya — On the anniversary of the capture and killing of Moammar Gadhafi, Libya is still grappling with the legacy of his four decades of rule as the interim government and the dictator’s former spokesman engaged in a war of words amid the on-going chaos.

The Libyan government said Saturday that its forces had detained Gadhafi’s high-profile spokesman Moussa Ibrahim, but an online recording from a man purporting to be Ibrahim denied that claim and said he wasn’t even in the country.

The conflicting reports, neither of which could be independently verified, reflect the turmoil that has persisted over the past year, leaving the oil-rich North African nation deeply divided.

Tensions have spiked as rival forces battle over the city of Bani Walid.

Bani Walid was the last major city in Libya to fall to the uprising.

Over the past year, it has seen periodic violence.

“We’ve lost too many people in Bani Walid and we are still losing them so I don’t think it’s time for a celebration,” said Abdesaleem Mahfoud, a local neighborhood council member in Tripoli, when asked about the anniversary of Gadhafi’s death.

For many who fought against Gadhafi, the new Libya cannot be born until the last vestiges of the old regime, fugitives like Ibrahim and towns like Bani Walid, have been routed.

Do you have High Blood Pressure?

Despite the availability of many classes of anti-hypertensive medications, hypertension remains a major cause of cardiovascular and renal disease and related deaths. Research has shown that the majority of hypertensive patients will require two or more antihypertensive drugs to achieve adequate blood pressure control. The physicians at Deaconess Clinic are researching the benefits of an investigational combination of two antihypertensive medications.

If you or someone you know have high blood pressure, you may qualify for this study that includes study evaluations, study medication and compensation as part of a national clinical trial conducted at Deaconess Clinic. You must be at least 18 years old to qualify. Health insurance is not required for participation Car Accident?

HENDERSON, KY - A new free report has recently been released that reveals information every car accident victim should have before they speak to anyone. Research shows that even a "fender bender" can cause pain, headaches, even arthritis. Many car accident victims worry more about their car than they do their rights. If you have been involved in an auto accident listen to the 24 hour toll-free recorded message by calling 1-800-454-3960. The call is FREE and so is the report.

Replace your joints,

JOINT REPLACEMENT PROGRAM

Jackie Willett of Grove Center, Kentucky, is enjoying her horses and her life again after hip replacement surgery.

SHE’S RIDING HIGH AGAIN. After severe pain kept Jackie Willett from doing what she loves, she had her hip replaced at Methodist Hospital.
The Joint Replacement Program specializes in hip and knee replacements for otherwise healthy patients whose joints have given out. Surgeries are performed by orthopaedic specialists Dr. Dennis Beck and Dr. Criss Yelton. They say Methodist’s group rehabilitation shortens hospital stays because the patients share a common experience, encouraging each other’s progress.
“This is going to sound crazy, but it was actually fun,” says Mrs. Willett of her rehabilitation experience. She notes that she even walked to her therapy session the day after surgery. “Everyone was so friendly, and so kind, and so helpful. I couldn’t have asked for better care anywhere.”

Re-Elect David A. Watkins, M.D.

State Representative

My name is David A. Watkins. I am a Family Physician in Henderson and have been in medicine since 1973 when I graduated from University of Louisville School of Medicine. I have lived in Henderson my entire life except for the years I spent at Western Ky. University in Bowling Green and the University of Louisville Medical School. I taught at Henderson Community College in the Biology Dept. for three years before going to Medical School.

I grew up in the East End of Henderson and attended Audubon School during my elementary years and Barret Jr. High and Henderson City High.

I have been married for 49 years to my wife, Peggy, and we have three sons. Scott is an Internal Medicine physician and is in practice with me. His wife is Anita and they have two children, Matthew and Hannah. Christopher is an OB-GYN physician in Louisville with Norton Healthcare and he has two children, Katie and Sam. Jonathan is a graduate student at the University of Louisville majoring in Math and plans to get his Doctorate in Math Education. He and his wife, Diane, currently reside in Louisville.

OBJECTIVES AT THIS TIME:

1. Improve the job environment with not just jobs but quality jobs that pay a living wage.
2. Education - We must continue to provide public education for all our children and make our college, universities and technical schools much more affordable.
3. I-69 - Continue working with the Western KY Caucus to bring this about for our area's economic development.
4. Funding for local projects will continue to be a priority for me - (example, Canoe Creek).
5. Continued support for our local park systems and remaining dedicated to making the entrance and exit to Audubon State Park safer.

JENKINS

raves in this horse-loving, Bluegrass State, but Darrell knows more about them than most of us do and he's a fan.

Darrell noted that Jerry's allover raven color is unusual, "with a unique cut mane." He added for the benefit of us city slickers that mules are a cross between a male donkey and a female horse.

"Jerry is out of a Tennessee Walking mare. Therefore, he is a gaited mule. This means he has that fast walk, higher stepping gait of a Tennessee walking horse. ...

"Mule people will tell you (mules) are generally more intelligent than a horse. They 'think' their way out of trouble where a horse can panic and flee out of trouble," Darrell said. "A horse will rarely fight as they are a 'flight' animal. ... A mule will stand, confront and fight threats."

Likely you've seen that famous painting of Napoleon crossing the Alps on a magnificent white stallion.

Truth is, Darrell said, the actual mount was a more sure-footed mule.

Mary Beth, who was a Gibbs employee here 11 years and now lives in Wheatcroft, strongly agrees with Darrell's assessment of mules.

Listen to her describe the smarts of the animals, and you'll conclude that the saying "horse sense" possibly should be replaced with "mule sense." Jerry is nine years old, and Mary Beth became his lucky owner four years ago. Formerly a horse woman, she's been a rider since her early youth.

She and her mule are out "every weekend in pretty weather," she said, and a favored destination is Shawnee National Forest.

When horsemen comment on her steed, she quickly informs them that Jerry is "one exceptional mule."

Speaking of horses reminds me of a recent column about the screen cowboy heroes of my childhood.

I wrote that one of my favorites was handsome, singing cowboy Eddie Dean.

The very day that column appeared on The Gleaner website, I received an email from Eddie's grandson who is Edgar Dean Glosup III. That was Eddie's real name (and I'm glad I didn't know that when I was a kid. It just wouldn't have been the same).

Edgar related that he lives in Santa Clarita, Calif., with his wife of 25 years and two daughters.

"My grandfather was quite a man," Edgar said. "He and I were best friends my whole life until he passed." To him, Eddie was "Grandpa Pal."

Edgar said one of his daughters, Anjelica, 20, "has carried on the Eddie Dean equestrian tradition as a fully trained horse trainer and practically grew up on horses since she was 2 years old."

Reading about his granddad, he related, "I really had some fond memories just flood in."

This whole Internet small world thing definitely has its advantages.

I think I'll write a column about the late, fabulous singer Rosemary Clooney, and see if her gorgeous nephew George drops me a line ...

Thanks to the Henderson County Detention Center, the Salvation Army, and a very generous public, nearly 600 local kids who previously had no hope of getting a bicycle now are pedaling along and getting great exercise.

Retired Henderson County Middle School teacher Roy Pullam, who had the inspiration for the program that sees jail inmates repairing donated bikes and the Salvation Army distributing them to deserving youngsters, initially would have been thrilled with a total contribution of 50 bikes.

Now, a couple of years later, he's in awe of the project's success.

More than 600 bikes have been given, but some are still being reconditioned.

"The demand continues," Roy said, "and our desire is to continue to meet the need."

Donated bikes are being accepted at the Salvation Army Store on Washington Street in Henderson, but pickup can also be arranged by calling 270-826-6150 or 270-826-4472.

Roy, who grew up in Providence in a hard-working family that was nevertheless poor, has a vivid memory of other, more fortunate kids riding off on their bikes for a day of adventure and leaving him waving a sad goodbye.

He doesn't want any other child to have that heart-sinking experience.

she said, noting that will be her last day in office. The election will choose a new mayor to serve out the term of Larry Thurby, who was removed by the city council in July. The mayoral candidates are former council members Paul Echols and Jack Horton Jr. and current councilman Philip Brewster Jr.

Corydon usually has trouble getting a full slate of candidates to run for the six city council seats. This time, however, there are 12 people running, which is indicative of the turmoil that has roiled the town. The winners on Nov. 6, however, won't take office until January.

McCormic said they will have their hands full. At least four major problems face them and the new mayor as starkly as a gun barrel. They are:

Road aid: The city has not had an audit completed since 2009-10, and the lack of one creates "a ripple effect that touches everything we try to do."

For instance, it has delayed the city getting $18,000 annually in municipal road aid, she said. The city got an exception from the state Department of Local Government one year, but "they would not make an exception for two years."

That means it is crucial for the city to bring its financial records up to date, which is problematical because "there are no computer records, no financial records in print that we've been able to find."

McCormic stressed that "the challenge for the new administration would be to be diligent ... and keep ing more could be done, and the teen returned home under hospice care.

According to relatives, one of Lane's wishes was to see his Facebook page reach 100,000 likes. A campaign was initiated and people from the United States and around the globe posted pictures of themselves giving a "Thumbs-up for Lane" which was one of Lane's favorite poses when pictures were taken of him.

In a story before his death, Lane's aunt, Claudia Wayne of Henderson County, told The Gleaner, "Ever since he was diagnosed, he's never complained. He's always smiling and in all of the pictures he's giving a 'thumbs-up' sign, she said. A guy in Virginia started the 'Thumbs-up For Lane' too, working as hard as she could to catch the emotion reflected in their eyes.

What she saw was love, admiration and respect. And she had five days to get it all on her camera.

"I think it's all about being patient, having a clear vision of what you need to cohesively tell the story and waiting for that to happen," Edwards said. "And when it does happen, being there."

Her efforts are part of the Mountain Workshops. Hosted by the Western Kentucky University Photojournalism Program, the workshops spent their 37th year in Henderson and Henderson County this past week. The last day was Saturday.

That meant more than 100 people made Henderson their temporary home to take, process and edit photographs; write captions and short stories on local people; and to create multimedia stories. All of it was expected to be published on http://mountainworkshops.org late Saturday or early this morning.

The concentrated effort to capture local life meant story assignments were also initially handed out on a local hair salon, on a motorcycle minister, and on local Somalian orphans who live with their aunt — just to name a few.

Not that all those stories necessarily panned out. And if they did, their focus and direction likely changed throughout the week.

Sewer loan: The city of Corydon owes $711,000 to the Kentucky Rural Water Finance Corp. for the loan that paid for the sewer system in 1993, and interest of $29,897 is due twice a year. The corporation is also demanding a copy of the city's recent audits, which is understandable considering that in recent years two of the city's sewer clerks have been convicted of embezzling large sums of money from the city.

Aging sewers: The sewer system is 20 years old and is starting to show its age, partially because it has not been maintained properly in the past, she said. State law requires the city to have a certified wastewater operator, which it does not have. The city is looking at possibly sharing an operator with the Henderson Water campaign (on Facebook), and it has just taken off."

Plans for the festival continued even after the teen's death.

"When we talked to Angie she said, 'I want this to be a celebration of his life,'" Eshbaugh said.

A former Henderson resident, Eshbaugh now lives in Tennessee.

So that's what they made it. A big celebration with live and silent auctions, entertainment, games, inflatables, a petting zoo, horseback rides, assessment of Alles on Wednesday, her first full day on the job.

"It's going to be on his legacy that he's leaving, what his co-workers think of him," she said then, before adding that she's still getting a sense of what story, exactly, she will be able to tell.

But on Thursday, Edwards reconsidered. Maybe it would be better to chronicle Alles' close relationship with his 92-year-old sister, Mary Frances. They live together.

Edwards thought she would have to choose between the two stories.

Then, "it was almost like an 'Aha!' moment," she said. "And no, (the story) was about a man near the end of his life, and his impact on people and what he's choosing to leave behind."

That means she's featuring Alles' home and work life, "to try to paint a picture of who this guy is."

Getting that type of access, being allowed to get that close, requires that photojournalists learn how to communicate with their subjects, said Tom Eblen, Edwards' writing coach for the Mountain Workshops.

He's a columnist for the Lexington Herald-Leader, and his family has Henderson roots.

"If they treat their subjects well, they will open up to them," Eblen said.

And stories do unfold, largely because photographers are instructed to choose their moments well.

Roughly 20,900 photographs are made in a typical Mountain Workshop by the photojournalism students. But each student is only allowed to take 550 photos during the five days he or she spends with a subject. That's because photographers are told to think about each shot they take — and not to just shoot blindly.

Edwards, for example, spent more than four hours with Alles on Wednesday. Yet she had used only 20 exposures before 3 p.m. that day.

"We are hurting financially and the sewer fund is the only moneymaking utility we have. This will be an ongoing problem for future administrations, as well."

Former school: The city bought the former elementary school for $125,000, and McCormic said it is a white elephant. The mortgage payment of $25,000 comes due annually, insurance is $14,000 annually and utility bills vary "according to what's not working or what's leaking. It's a financial burden we cannot afford."

McCormic said she concluded before taking the mayor's post that disincorporation makes the most sense for the 320 households in the community, founded in 1847, now that she's been on the inside of city government that conviction is even stronger.

pumpkin painting, a cake walk and crafts. When people got hungry they could purchase burgers, hot dogs, pulled pork, pork chops and burgoo, among other food items.

More than 100 people volunteered at the festival, Eshbaugh said, and the Henderson County School District's Transportation Department ran a shuttle from Henderson County High School to the fairgrounds.

A2Z Computer Services conducted live-video streaming of the festival and will have live video of the funeral service for Lane at 3:30 p.m. Monday, she said, adding that people can view the feed at the A2Z website.

"(His death) has been hard on me and my kids," Skaggs said. "It made me realize how precious my kids are. No child should have to go through what he went through."

So how does Edwards decide what makes a good shot?

"A big part of being a photojournalist rather than just a journalist is you do have to study the mannerisms of people, so that if you have this vision of what you need, you are able to recognize when that happens so you can shoot it," she said.

It also helps having a subject who is not distracted or bothered by the camera.

Rick Loomis, a Pulitzer Prize-winning photojournalist with the Los Angeles Times, said the best subjects have no camera awareness. And that comes from the subject trusting and accepting the photojournalist's entrance into their life.

"It's about intimacy, about moments, and about trying to capture what a particular situation feels like or looks like," added William Snyder, Edwards' photojournalism coach, who has won four Pulitzer Prizes. He's also a Henderson native who got his start at The Gleaner. "You have to listen, you have to feel it, you have to pay attention."

That's exactly what Edwards was expecting to do this past week, inside Alles' business and home, as part of a program that is quite unusual, at least in Henderson.

But it seems to be exactly what she wants.

"I want to be in the newspaper world, to get to a point where employers are sending me abroad to shoot stories," Edwards said. "I'm really interested in the cultures that aren't seen."

Environmental regulations are going to get even more strict as times goes on, she said, making running a sewer system a problem. "It's going to be more difficult to afford it and to keep up with the paperwork."

The city is required to get new street signs, which is expensive. "Everything that comes down as a new regulation is expensive. That will be costly for us and a new administration."

Henderson Fiscal Court has been great to work with, she said, noting that she attended Tuesday's meeting to thank the magistrates. Future cooperation is needed between county and Corydon governments, she said, cautioning future city administrations against being too proud to ask for help.

"I love this little town and I want the best for it."

BISMARCK, N.D.

Man sells McJordan sauce for $10,000

A man who used to own McDonald's restaurants in North Dakota is about $10,000 richer after selling a 20-year-old container of McJordan barbecue sauce to a buyer in Chicago. The sauce was used on McJordan Burgers, named for basketball icon Michael Jordan. The promotional item was sold in limited markets for a short time in the 1990s, when Jordan led the Chicago Bulls to six NBA championships. Mort Bank, of Bismarck, saved the gallon jug of sauce after selling his McDonald's restaurants in Bismarck-Mandan and Minot in 1996.

"It was in my basement and I would look at it occasionally," he told The Bismarck Tribune. "I thought it would be worth something someday."

Bank advertised the sauce on eBay, saying: "A once in a lifetime chance to own the rarest of rare Michael Jordan and McDonald's collectible!" It sold for $9,995 Monday night to a buyer from Chicago whom Bank has not identified.

Bank told the Chicago Tribune that the buyer was not Jordan himself.

"I'm sure he's a Bulls or Michael Jordan fan, and hopefully he's not going to put it on his ribs or his burger," Bank told KXMB-TV of the buyer. "But it's up to him; he can do whatever he wants with it."

HOUSTON

NFL players play the name game

State your name and school.

That's the only guidance NFL players get before fore taping introductions for Sunday night games.

Most simply list their college, but some players get creative.

Last week, three players on the Houston Texans' offensive line gave their elementary schools and one his middle school.

The Houston linemen decided to use their elementary schools last season for their first appearance in a playoff game. When Houston was to be on NBC again Sunday night, they planned to recite their middle schools.

What they didn't realize is that players must specifically ask to make a change or the network uses what already has been shot. So new addition Derek Newton said his middle school according to plan, only to be the odd man out when three of the four other linemen were left with their elementary schools from last year's footage.

"We were kind of bummed out about it because we all wanted to be the same," Houston left tackle Duane Brown said.

NEW YORK

Pregame routines going on the clock

Tired of its games starting late while players go through elaborate handshakes, chest bumps and other routines, the NBA is putting players on the clock.

LeBron James can still do his chalk toss and Kevin Garnett can still skip over to the baseline and pound his chest to pump up the Boston crowd, but they'd better do it on time.

Ninety seconds will be put on the clock once pregame introductions are completed, and referees will let teams know in their huddles when it hits 30.

Wire reports

By Arnie Stapleton

The NFL's new form-fitting uniforms are a big hit, especially among players with sculpted physiques.

"It makes you look like you're playing out there with nothing on," Denver Broncos safety Rahim Moore said. "It makes you feel like you're free, like you're wearing a napkin it's so thin."

That's precisely the problem for players who don't have the Adonis-like bodies. The shrink-wrap fit of the new lightweight, body-contoured uniforms doesn't look so flattering on the jelly-belly linemen.

"Big guys don't like it when they fit well. We don't like the tight stuff," 314-pound New York Giants guard Chris Snee said. "You know, stuff's falling all over, your stomach is hanging out."

Still, Snee is like many other players with beefier bodies or swollen stomachs who say they, too, like the new uniforms, because there's less material for opponents to grab.

Most of the league's huskier players don't seem too worried about appearances anyway.

"If you're going to put a lineman in it, there's not too much you can do with a tight jersey and tight pants," said B.J. Raji, the Green Bay Packers' 334-pound defensive tackle.

New York Jets tackle Austin Howard, who packs 333 pounds on his 6-foot-7 frame, called the new Nike uniforms "a little more trendy, I guess you can say."

"They're a little tight, a little snug, but they've always been a little tight," he said. "They were even like that last year, but these have different material so you don't sweat like you would with the other ones. I mean, you can't wring them out. It kind of just rolls off. The old jerseys, you would sweat and they would weigh you down."

Justin Bannan, a 305-pound defensive lineman for the Broncos, said he was thrilled when Nike, whose apparel he wore at the University of Colorado, signed a five-year partnership in April with the NFL, which had been outfitted by Reebok for the last decade.

Even though he looks like a guy trying to fit into his old tux for his 20-year high school reunion, Bannan said he wears a smaller-sized jersey anyway to try to thwart grabby offensive linemen.

"It doesn't look good on us. I look like a fat you-know-what, but it is what it is, nothing I can do about it," Bannan said. "I try to get mine as tight as possible because they hold so bad. It's just the way it is."

Nike spokesman Brian Strong said the new "Nike Elite 51" uniform that features such things as zoned mesh ventilation and materials to help increase range of motion weren't designed with just the svelte guys in mind.

"The thing is we understand that the linemen are part of the game, too, so we built the Elite 51 uniform in a variety of sizes, a variety of cuts with players of all shapes and sizes in mind," Strong said. "So, the idea is to enhance performance across the board. And when we say it's built for speed, it's not just built for speed among the running backs corps. We really did look to enhance performance and design for all football players."

Strong said the shrink-wrap element of the jersey is "about reducing grab points. So, essentially we're trying to enhance performance of the athlete. If we can make him just a little more elusive from that opponent, that's really what we're looking for."

Statistics show they could be happening. Sacks are up slightly this year, with 415 league-wide so far, the most through Week 6 since there were 431 in 2000 and 10 more than there were at this point last season, according to STATS LLC.

Holding penalties are, well, holding steady.

"In my confines, offensive linemen will still find a way to hold you. You know what I mean? It's not like that's going to change," Raji said. "Throughout the game, one of those guys will still find a way to hold."

Taking out the first three weeks of the season to account for games officiated by replacements during the league's lockout of its regular crews, there have been 88 offensive holding penalties called over the last three weeks, and 68 of those were accepted.

Going back to 2006, STATS said the average numbers in Weeks 4-6 were 83 flags thrown and 68 accepted.

Some players say Nike still has some work to do, though.

Baltimore Ravens 335-pound defensive tackle Haloti Ngata said Nike "has to adjust some things. The stuff tears a lot more easily, I think. Other than that, they're good. They're not too tight. I love it tight because there's less grabbing. Other than the fact they keep tearing a lot, it's fine."

Dolphins linebacker Kevin Burnett said he likes the jerseys but not the pants and said his Nike shoes come apart easily. His teammate, 312-pound defensive tackle Randy Starks, loves the shoes.

"I go by looks. You look good, you feel good, you play good," Starks said. "These look nice."

Nike said it's always looking for ways to improve.

"Nothing specific for upcoming seasons just yet but it's in our nature to continue to innovate," Strong said. "We'll always accept athlete feedback."

Giants receiver Victor Cruz, who owns a clothing company called Young Whales, is a fan of the new jerseys, which he said repel precipitation and perspiration better "so it doesn't get as heavy" as the Reebok jerseys did.

As a fashion "expert," Cruz laughed at the notion of the burly guys up front wondering, "Does this jersey make me look fat?"

"It's not too pleasing to the eye sometimes, but it's better than the stuff they had last year," Cruz said. "Actually, they look pretty decent. The cleats have some color in them and they look coordinated. It's a good look for them, a change-up."

Drivers experience fast turnarounds

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Carl Edwards and Clint Bowyer returned home to Kansas Speedway a year ago at very different points in their careers.

Edwards had claimed the top spot in the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship a week earlier and was locked into a tense title race. Bowyer used the venue to announce his next career move after a nerve-racking summer scouring a limited free agent market.

Things couldn't be any more different a year later as they've returned for today's race.

It's Bowyer, in his first year with Michael Waltrip Racing, who is now a title contender. Edwards, who lost the championship to Tony Stewart on a tiebreaker, is stuck in neutral after a steep drop-off.

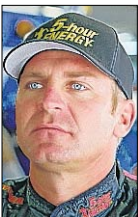

"Man this thing is so competitive," Edwards said. "I cannot express to you guys how quickly everyone leapfrogs in the garage."

There is no better example than Bowyer and Edwards of how fast the landscape can change in the Sprint Cup Series.

Edwards, who still lives two hours away in hometown Columbia, Mo., goes into today's race ranked 15th in the standings. He's not in the 12-driver Chase field and is stuck in a 64-race winless streak dating back to Phoenix in Feb. 2011. It's the longest drought of his nine-year Sprint Cup career.

This wasn't what anyone had in mind after last year's finale, which ended in a tie between Edwards and Stewart. The championship went to Stewart based on his five Chase victories, and Edwards sat down with the Roush Fenway Racing management group to figure out where they could have found that one difference-making point.

"Well, that didn't work

very well, did it?" he asked.

The contrast is Bowyer, from 90 minutes away in Emporia. He's having the best season of his career with a team he wasn't even sure he wanted to join.

Bowyer had six good years with Richard Childress Racing and wanted to stay there, but couldn't work out an extension last season. With so few open seats, fledgling MWR persuaded Bowyer to take a chance on them because they had a plan in place toward becoming a legitimate player in NASCAR.

That leap of faith may be the best decision Bowyer's ever made.

His win last Saturday at Charlotte was his career-best third of the season and edged him back into the title race. He goes into today's race ranked fourth in the standings, 28 points behind leader Brad Keselowski.

BOWLING GREEN — Kolton Browning hit Rashon Ceaser on a two-point conversion pass in overtime to give Louisiana-Monroe a 43-42 victory over Western Kentucky on Saturday.

The Warhawks (5-2, 3-0) are now the only undefeated Sun Belt Conference team. The Hilltoppers (5-2, 2-1) lost for the first time in Sun Belt play since Oct. 1, 2011.

Browning's two-point conversion followed his 4-yard touchdown run that brought the Warhawks within 42-41.

"We had a lot of confidence in the two-point conversion," ULM coach Todd Berry said. "I knew when the play was called we had it. As soon as I saw the defense, I knew we had it."

Western Kentucky had a chance to sack Browning on the play, but he eluded the rush, spun right and found Ceaser, who was running a drag route through the middle of the end zone.

"We lost contain," Western Kentucky coach Willie Taggart said. "We said we can't lose contain on this quarterback. We had a guy coming right at him and we let him outside, and that's when he's dangerous because you don't

Disappointing teams set to face off

■ Cowboys head to Carolina, while Steelers visit Cincinnati

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press

Two of the NFL's most disappointing teams meet Sunday in Charlotte.

And two more of them meet in Cincinnati.

The Cowboys head to Carolina having lost three of their last four after an uplifting opening victory at the Giants. Dallas (2-3) had designs on taking charge of the NFC East, especially following the victory in the Meadowlands, but finds itself in last place in the division thanks to bad time management, critical dropped passes and a conference-high nine interceptions off Tony Romo.

"We need a victory, bad," fullback Lawrence Vickers said. "This is very critical to get this win."

Carolina (1-4) didn't have such high expectations, but the Panthers expected to build off Cam Newton's Offensive Rookie of the Year campaign and at least be in the mix in the NFC South. Instead — and even with New Orleans and Tampa Bay struggling — the Panthers are an also-ran, ranked 23rd in yards gained and 25th in points scored; in 2011 they finished seventh in total offense and fifth in points scored.

The Steelers' offense has been very protective of the ball (only four turnovers) and quite productive through the air, ranking seventh in yards passing. But Pittsburgh (2-3) has the appearance of a team in transition, particularly on the offensive line and everywhere on defense, where injuries have been damaging — star safety Troy Polamalu won't play Sunday night.

"It comes down to play-making," coach Mike Tomlin said, "and we haven't made enough significant plays."

When they head to Cincinnati (3-3), the Steelers will find an AFC North rival that is reeling. The Bengals flopped against Miami at home, then in Cleveland, handing the Browns their first win. Their big-play defense has yet to materialize.

■ Cleveland at Indianapolis: New owner Jimmy Haslam hopes the Browns can build on last Sunday's victory over Cincinnati, when, he says, they played their best football of the season in the fourth quarter. But the Browns haven't won two straight in this series since 1988.

As can be expected from a young, rebuilding team, the Colts have been inconsistent. They followed their rousing rally to beat Green Bay with a dud in the Meadowlands against the Jets.

Most intriguing matchup here should be Colts veteran receiver Reggie Wayne, who has been sensational lately, against Cleveland cornerback Joe Haden.

■ Tennessee at Buffalo: Yet two more teams that had high expectations for this season, the Titans hoping to build off their surprising 9-7 record of 2011, the Bills believing their retooled roster was ready to carry them back to the playoffs for the first time since Jim Kelly, Bruce Smith, Marv Levy — well, not quite that long ago, but you get the picture.

BOB LEVERONE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tennessee hasn't played since rallying to upset Pittsburgh in a Thursday night game, and will go with Matt Hasselbeck at quarterback with Jake Locker still sidelined by his dislocated left shoulder. Hasselbeck has been sacked eight times, and Buffalo finally discovered a pass rush in its overtime win at Arizona, knocking down Cardinals QBs five times.

■ Detroit at Chicago: The Lions might have saved their season with a big rally to win at Philadelphia last week. They might need something similar against a better team at Soldier Field.

Detroit ranks second in yards on offense and Chicago is third in overall defense. If the Lions commit 16 penalties, an NFL high this season, the way they did against the Eagles, the Bears won't let them hang around.

■ Green Bay at St. Louis: This is a solid test to see if the Packers righted themselves with last Sunday night's victory at Houston. St. Louis is 3-0 at home, with victories over some good teams: Washington, Arizona and Seattle.

St. Louis outplayed Miami on the road last weekend and still fell 17-14.

■ Baltimore at Houston: Here they are, the only two AFC teams with winning records. No kidding — there are seven teams at 3-3, including the entire East.

The Ravens had a rousing 31-29 victory over Dallas last weekend, but it was way too costly. The right triceps injury that likely will sideline Ray Lewis for the remainder of the season takes away Baltimore's heart and soul, the true leader of the Ravens. And the left knee injury to Lardarius Webb that requires surgery takes away the team's best cover cornerback.

After its first stumble of the season, Houston can grab back the inside track to being the AFC's elite team.

■ Arizona at Minnesota: The banged-up Cardinals go back to John Skelton at quarterback after Kevin Kolb hurt his ribs. Arizona has lost two straight as its offense stagnated: After scoring 91 points in its four victories, Arizona has 19 in its successive defeats.

Minnesota might not be the best place to get things straight. The Vikings, one of the most pleasant surprises in the league, seem to be getting their pass rush on track and Arizona has yielded 28 sacks, 22 in the last three games.

■ N.Y. Jets at New England: One of football's most bitter rivalries, and with the Jets coming off a lopsided victory and the Patriots blowing a lead in Seattle to lose, New York has taken the offensive — verbally.

Hard to imagine with coach Rex Ryan, isn't it? "I want them to know, and they know, that I think we're going to beat them," Ryan said.

Although the Jets have tried to emphasize a "Ground and Pound" running game, it's the Patriots who have been more successful. New England is averaging 4.2 yards a carry and has 10 touchdowns rushing. New York is at 3.8 with four TDs, all by Shonn Greene, who ran for a career-high 161 yards and three touchdowns against Indianapolis.

■ Washington at N.Y. Giants: Washington went 2-4 in the NFC East a year ago. Both wins came against the Giants, who merely went on to win it all.

These Redskins, sparked by the versatility and excitement Robert Griffin III brought to the nation's capital, are a better team than the 2011 version. Griffin isn't the only difference — the defense is eighth against the run and the team is plus-9 in turnover margin — but he is the main reason the Giants must be very careful.

■ New Orleans at Tampa Bay: So let's see if not losing in two weeks — a comeback win over San Diego followed by a bye — has gotten the Saints back on track. There's still a ton of noise surrounding them with the bounties scandal, of course, and one of Tampa Bay's four victories last season came against the Saints. In fact, the Bucs then lost their next 10.

■ Jacksonville at Oakland: The Raiders played their best game of the season in nearly handing Atlanta its first loss. Nearly: Oakland fell apart late and was beaten by Matt Bryant's 55-yard field goal.

Darren McFadden had a career-high 209 yards from scrimmage with three TDs in the last meeting with the Jaguars, who are far less formidable than the Falcons.

Tigers' Valverde will be ready for World Series

By Noah Trster
Associated Press

DETROIT — Jose Valverde threw a few pitches during Detroit's workout, then returned to the dugout as usual.

Valverde's role for the World Series still isn't clear, but the right-hander doesn't seem to mind.

"I don't care. All I want is to be a champion," he said. "If I had to start, I'd do it."

Valverde has been Detroit's closer for three years and didn't blow a save through all of 2011, but this postseason has been ugly. He lost Game 4 of the division series against

Jose Valverde

Oakland and gave up four runs in the AL championship series opener against the New York Yankees. The Tigers went on to win that game and sweep the series, but Valverde hasn't been used since.

The World Series begins Wednesday at either St. Louis or San Francisco. Valverde sounds confident he's made the necessary mechanical adjustments, and so does manager Jim Leyland.

"I think everybody's making too big of a deal of the Valverde situation. Valverde's going to be ready. There's nothing wrong with Valverde. He's going to be fine," Leyland said. "I got a kick out of it. Nobody wanted me to pitch him, but everybody asks me every day if he's going to be the closer. I don't know what they expect, but I'm going to just see what happens."

Leyland went with other options after Valverde's meltdown against the Yankees. Left-hander Phil Coke got the save in Games 2 and 3.

The more flexible approach to the late innings allowed Leyland to use Coke in crucial spots against a New York lineup that has plenty of left-handed power. Against the Cardinals or Giants, Valverde might be back in his old role. Aside from Coke, Detroit's top relief options include right-handers Joaquin Benoit, Octavio Dotel and Al Albuquerque.

"Sometimes the biggest out is in the seventh inning or eighth inning, not always in the ninth inning," Leyland said during the series against New York. "That's why when you start going by committee, that's what 'committee' means. You say, 'This is the most important out I have to get. I will use my bullet now and take my chances later."

Still, Leyland sounds ready for Valverde to contribute again.

"To me, you've got to pinch hit in the National League cities, you're going to have to use your pitchers, so if you get behind, that's just the way it is," Leyland said. "I think he'll be a big part of this World Series."

Coke, meanwhile, has been in the spotlight more than usual, and he's certainly enjoying the ride.

"I don't have any idea what's going on. I just know I'm having a good time," Coke said.

Madisonville wins region title

Gleaner staff

EDDYVILLE, Ky. — Madisonville edged Hopkinsville 3-2 to win the girls Second Region Soccer Tournament on Saturday.

The win will send the Lady Maroons (21-1-1) into the first-round of the state tournament where they will play at Murray (22-2) on Monday.

Following the final, Henderson County's Christin Poole and Maddie Gish were named to the all-tournament team. The Lady Colonels also had three players selected for the all-region team, based on regular-season play. Poole was a first-team pick, while Emma Newland and Katherine Dawson made the second team.

Love, Furyk share lead at St. Simons

The Associated Press

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. — Three weeks after they were on stage together for the closing ceremony at the Ryder Cup, Davis Love III and Jim Furyk wound up together in a place few people would have imagined — in the final pairing at the McGladrey Classic. Love made a 15-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole Saturday for a 4-under 66, giving him a share of the lead with Furyk, who also had a 66 by doing most of his work early. He made a 45-foot birdie putt over a slight ridge on the second hole, added three more birdies through six holes, and settled for eight pars at the end. They were at 13-under 197, two shots clear of Arjun Atwal (69) and D.J. Trahan (66), two players who could avoid a return to Q-school with a big week at Sea Island.

Love, the tournament host and a Sea Island resident since he was 14, has gone four years without winning. Ryder Cup captains typically are at the end of their careers.

Stenhouse steals 6th Nationwide win

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Ricky Stenhouse Jr. came back from two laps down Saturday to win the Nationwide Series race at Kansas Speedway.

The race was extended six laps because of a late caution, which helped Stenhouse grab his series-leading sixth win because the cars in front of him didn't have enough gas to make it to the finish.

Sam Hornish Jr., Paul Menard and Kyle Busch all ran out of gas.

Stenhouse, who had lined up in fourth on the restart, zipped past for the victory.

Jeter has surgery on broken ankle

NEW YORK — Yankees shortstop Derek Jeter has had surgery to repair a broken left ankle.

Dr. Robert Anderson operated Saturday in Charlotte, N.C. The Yankees said complete recovery for their 38-year-old captain is expected to take four-to-five months.

Victim angry that Jackson may return to Murray State team

The Associated Press

MURRAY, Ky. — A Kentucky man run over by a Murray State basketball player in a Wal-Mart parking lot says he's angry that his attacker is being allowed to return to the team after pleading guilty.

Jason Clement of Murray told WPSD-TV in Paducah a 30-day jail sentence for Racers guard Zaveral "Zay" Jackson in too lenient.

Jackson, a 20-year-old from Hammond, La., pleaded guilty earlier this month to wanton endangerment.

Jackson admitted to running down Clement and his wife Sept. 9.

The surveillance video of the incident shows Jason Clement clinging to the windshield of a white Monte Carlo.

Clement recalled thinking, "How am I going to get off this car? Am I going to see my kids again?"

Clement said the altercation began after he and his wife, Alia, noticed Jackson slam a shopping cart into a parked truck.

Clement said his wife made a comment about how their kids would not even do such a thing and Jackson snapped. Jackson then returned and drove his car into the pair.

Clement said he fell on his right arm when Jackson slammed on the brakes and he was thrown from the car.

He said the fall left him with little mobility in that arm but has not been able to afford medical attention.

Mark Blankenship, the Commonwealth Attorney for Calloway County, said the Murray State sophomore guard appears remorseful and that Judge Dennis Foust is reviewing the plea deal.

"Based on what I'm hearing he's very remorseful. He regrets what this has done to his team, the university, the victims," Blankenship said.

Clement says he doesn't want to hear an apology from Jackson.

"Saying you're sorry? That's just words," Clement said.

Do you have Psoriasis?

Plaque psoriasis is a long-term disease of the immune system that causes red scaly patches, often with a silvery scale, to appear on the skin. Approximately 1.5 million American adults suffer from moderate to severe plaque psoriasis. These plaques may itch, be painful, and can bleed. They can appear anywhere on the body, but are most commonly found on the elbows, knees, scalp and lower back. People with plaque psoriasis may notice that there are times when their skin worsens, then gets better.

The Deaconess Clinic Department of Dermatology is participating in a national clinical research study of an investigational drug for psoriasis. If you suffer from moderate to severe psoriasis, you may qualify to receive no-cost skin assessments by a board-certified dermatologist, study medication and compensation for time and travel. You must be at least 18 years old to participate.

Health insurance is not required for participation. To see if you qualify or to receive more information, please call the Research InfoLine at 812-474-7184 or toll free at 1-877-654-0311.

Kentucky's modern gun deer season opens Nov. 10 statewide. This season is timed to coincide with the rut, the deer's annual mating season. Modern gun hunters should encounter productive hunting, if the cool weather trends continue.

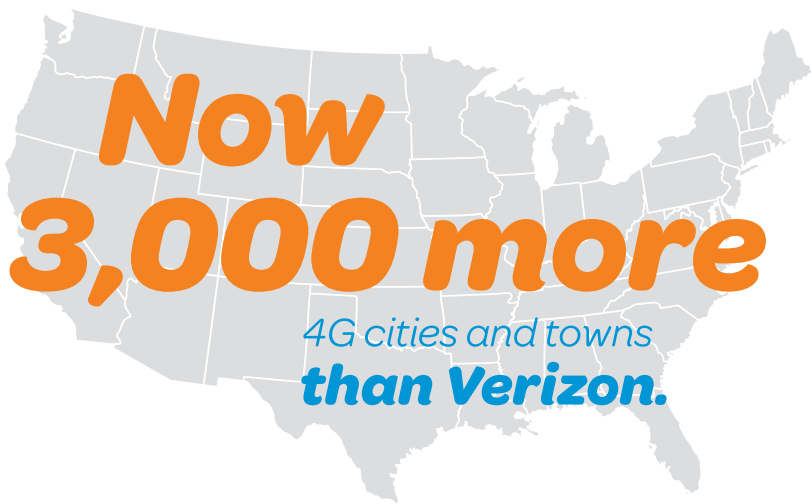

Officials expect good hunting for gun season

By Lee McClellan
Kentucky Afield

It is mid-October and anticipation builds as Kentucky's deer season nears its peak: the opening of modern gun season. This year's opening day on Nov. 10 is timed to coincide with the onset of the rut, the white-tailed deer's annual mating season. Here are some observations at this stage of the season: The archery harvest continues to make news. Hunters took a record 5,578 deer during September. It was the first time the archery harvest during September exceeded 5,000 and the fifth straight year that archers achieved a record harvest during the opening month of bow season. The season harvest total by archers has also risen the past five years, from 13,941 in the 2007-2008 archery deer season to 18,170 last season. "In the Zone 1 and Zone 2 counties it's important that there are more than 50 percent does in the harvest. This slows growth, improves sex ratios, and generally helps to stabilize herds," said Tina Brunjes, big game coordinator for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "The continued harvest of does is a key component in our harvest strategy." About 25 percent of successful deer hunters take two or more deer. The overall statewide harvest is expected to remain in the range of 110,000 to 120,000 deer a year, since the number of hunters is stable. The overall age structure of the deer harvest indicates hunters are passing up young deer. "The majority of antlered bucks taken during the 2011-12 season were at least 2 1/2 years old," said Brunjes. "Female age class distribution in the harvest was nearly identical. Most does taken were mature adults, 2 1/2 years old or older. The harvest of older does should be a priority to maintain a healthy, balanced herd." Adult does are more likely to have twins and they tend to run off the yearling bucks in their range. The trend of hunters passing on young deer is reflected by the statistics on trophy deer taken in Kentucky. These stats are compelling. During the past three seasons, 172 deer reported to Kentucky Fish and Wildlife qualified for entry into the Boone & Crockett record book, including a record 68 taken during the 2011-2012 season deer season. Last season, the trophy deer taken in Kentucky came from 44 different Kentucky counties. In the past three seasons, trophy deer have been harvested from 81 of 120 Kentucky counties. Some of the Kentucky counties that produced the most Boone & Crockett record book deer the past three seasons include: Ohio and Whitley, seven deer; Casey, Greenup and Hardin, six deer; Boone and Owen, five deer; Christian, Lewis, Shelby and Todd, four deer, and Bracken, Campbell, Fulton, Gallatin, Henry, Kenton and McLean, three deer. "Kentucky deer hunters have an opportunity to harvest trophy class deer in virtually any county," said Brunjes. Despite the hot, dry summer, wildlife biologists found a statewide average of 52 percent of the white oaks and 66 percent of the red oaks produced acorns this year. "Based on what we observed, this year's mast crop is rated average for white oaks (40 to 59 percent of trees produced mast), and good for red oaks (60 to 79 percent)," said Ben Robinson, wildlife biologist for Kentucky Fish and Wildlife. The lone exception is the beechnut crop. "The beech crop was rated as a failure," said Robinson. "Only 19 percent of the beech trees observed had nuts." Beech trees are found throughout Kentucky, and are a favorite food of deer when available. The greatest numbers of beech trees are in central and eastern Kentucky. This deer season is a highly productive one so far. Signs point to excellent deer hunting in the coming weeks.

We've lost 113 pounds together and Cindy has lost 66 inches

We both had tried several different weight loss plans with some success only to regain what we had lost. Then we found the Perfect Plan and that is what it was THE PERFECT PLAN. We needed a plan to help us learn what to eat and when to eat the right foods. We wanted to eat regular food not prepackaged. The Perfect Plan was just that. And we did it together and kept each other going along with help from Jan and her staff. We reached our goal and are so happy. We get to eat plenty of food, including desserts, and even go out to most restaurants, order from the menu and pick meals that fit the plan. This is a plan that we believe we will be able to maintain for life. Thanks so much to Jan and all the staff, you all are terrific! Give them a try ... what do you have to lose?

RIBBON CUTTINGS

Tokyo Teppanyaki

Michael Qiu (holding scissors) and his staff celebrated the opening of Tokyo Teppanyaki with a ribbon cutting on Sept. 18. Come enjoy the sushi, hibachi and traditional Japanese cuisine. Tokyo Teppanyaki is located at 2222 U.S. 41-N. They are open for lunch and dinner. For more information visit www.tokyoteppanyaki.com or call 270-869-1968. (Photo by Amber Schaudt)

Lynda Peters, Tastefully Simple Independent Consultant

The chamber welcomed Lynda Peters, (holding scissors) a Tastefully Simple Independent Consultant, as a new member on Sept. 21 with a ribbon cutting in the Chamber office. Her husband, long time local banker Sonny Peters, held the ribbon. Tastefully Simple offers a wide selection of convenient, easy-to-prepare foods, and a great selection of gift baskets. For more information and to view the catalog, visit Peters' website at www.tastefullysimple.com/web/lpeters5 or call (270) 823-2541. ### Bluegrass Transport & Expeditors

Owners Barry McGarrh (holding bow) and Cary McGarrh (holding scissors) continue the family tradition and celebrate a dream come true for these brothers by opening Bluegrass Transport and Expeditors. To celebrate Bluegrass' new chamber membership, the chamber held a ribbon cutting on Sept. 24 at 2047 Cresline Drive. Bluegrass Transport is a family-owned transportation company that offers transportation services at a competitive cost. Call (270) 827-8365 for more information. (Photo by Amber Schaudt)

GOLFAPALOOZA!

Though the weather threatened early in the morning, the clouds ultimately cleared for the chamber's Golfapalooza! scramble, which was held on Sept. 17 at the Henderson Country Club. First place for the second year in a row were the Evansville Icemen, pictured from left, Phil Plante, Bill Morrison, Luke Burket and Todd Robinson. Second place went to the Colonial Assisted Living team of Jimmy Blair, Mike Church, Isaac Church and Brian Pritchett. At the end of the day, every player went home with a full goody bag or a great door prize. The chamber would especially like to thank the Henderson Country Club for hosting the tournament, hole sign sponsors, prize and gift providers, food sponsors and the presenting sponsor, Sebree Works/ Rio Tinto, for making Golfapalooza! 2012 possible.

The Home Front

Plant trees, shrubs during fall months for best results

The fall months of October, November and December are one of the best times to plant tree and shrubs in the landscape. Planting trees and shrubs during the dormant season is less stressful for the plant being installed.

One major step in planting any tree or shrub is selecting an ideal site. A site free of overhead power lines and other utilities should be considered.

Homeowners often run into problems or disappointment when trees become mature too close to power lines.

The trees have to be pruned heavily or topped, which leads to poor health and many times death of a tree.

Soil conditions at the site should also be considered. For most tree and shrub species, plant in a well-drained area. Areas that are low lying can be planted with species that tolerate wetter soils such as bald cypress or river birch.

Will the plant grow well in a particular spot?

For example, a full sun plant is not going to perform well in a heavily shaded area. Crape myrtle may survive in shade, but it will thrive and bloom in full sun.

How large will the tree be at maturity? A tree that reaches 50 feet in height and 50 feet in width should not be planted between the sidewalk and the front porch. Do some tree research before you plant and make sure you know the size of the tree at maturity?

The three types of plants available are container, ball and burlap, and bare root. Container trees are generally smaller than balled and burlap trees, but both can be planted in the fall. Bare root trees will do better planted in the spring before new growth starts.

No matter the type of tree you plant, remember to remove all the packing material. This may include any nursery twine, string, plastic plant tags, plastic containers, wire, etc. Anything that will not rot should be removed.

One of the most important steps in planting is digging a large hole. You want to dig a hole at least two to three times the size of the root-ball of the plant you are going to install. The bigger the hole, the better it will be for root establishment.

The hole for balled-and-burlap and container-grown plants should be as deep as the root ball.

The top of the root-ball should be at the same level as the top of the soil line, or slightly above the soil line. If it is a little shallow and the root-ball is above the soil line, this is much better than a root-ball that is too deep. Bare-root plants require a hole that is slightly deeper than the root system.

After planting, water the tree thoroughly. Water the plant every seven to 10 days in dry conditions, especially during the summer months. Adding fertilizer is not necessary for the first year.

Once you have it planted, add 2-3 inch layer of mulch around the base of the tree. Do not pile the mulch against the bark of the tree. This may cause the bark to remain too moist, leading to rot or insect problems.

Consider planting trees native to Kentucky. Visit the following website for a list of native trees: www.uky.edu/Ag/Horticulture/kytreeswebsite/treeprofiles/treelist.htm.

Organize your gardening gear for easy future projects

By Joe Lamp'l
Scripps Howard News Service

Ever gotten ready to spend the day in the garden only to give up because you couldn't find the tools for the job? Or find there's no room on your potting bench to work? Well, then, it's time to reconsider and reorganize your garden gear.

All you need is a corner of the garage, part of a mudroom or even a back-porch wall. Take my friends Stephen and Kristin Pategas, for example. They are two of the most organized gardeners I know. Nothing is out of place, including the countless hand tools and pots they keep meticulously arranged on their wall and potting bench.

Although you certainly don't need to be as fastidious, here are some simple tips to straighten up your current space and to get things organized for next year's growing season.

If you haven't used something in over a year, or find yourself saying, "I didn't know that was there!," then pitch it. Decide what you can donate to charity or offer at a yard sale and what is just junk. If you can't part with an old tool for sentimental reasons, repurpose it either as garden art or for another function.

Some old-fashioned claw-weeders, for example, are now handles on gates and shed doors; the tines of a broken soil rake now hang gloves on the wall.

Once you've tossed everything that's broken, unused or just plain trash, find a place for what's left. When every tool has a home it's much easier to replace it when you're done working and to find it next time it's needed.

Ask yourself which tools you use all the time. Which are seasonal? Big soil-turning shovels, landscape rakes and leaf mulchers find a home in the shed rafters most of the year.

Hand spades, pruners, gloves and a combination trowel-saw-weeder hang in a five-gallon bucket right on my shed door. These are often all I need for an afternoon of gardening.

Keep the lawn mower in a place where it's easy to get to without being in the way. Heavy bags of potting soil, gravel and the like should be stored on a low, heavy-duty shelf at about waist level — right at the potting bench if you have one. You won't have to stoop to pick them up or carry them too far and risk a back injury.

Outline the shapes of tools on a couple of pieces of pegboard attached to the studs of your garage, or under hangers mounted into the walls.

Masking tape, a permanent marker or even paint outlines for each tool may make finding and replacing them a no-brainer. Those empty outlines just beg to be filled with tools put back where they belong!

Thinking vertically can really free up floor space and put things at an easy-to-see level. Broom hangers can be used to keep rakes, shovels and brooms in place. Or just use some large screws driven into exposed studs as hangers.

Speaking of studs, attach a couple of boards horizontally across some and slip a spade or hoe in the space between the boards and the wall.

Smaller gardening items — hand tools, the hose nozzle and the like — fit into a clear plastic shoe holder hanging on the back of a door. The transparent pockets make all the little items easy to see at a glance.

Screw soup cans, coffee cans and oatmeal boxes to the underside of wooden shelves with the open ends facing you.

The various-sized cylinders are great little pigeonholes for all kinds of tiny items like plant labels, seed packets, stakes or pens.

Keep a dozen or so wire or plastic baskets of various sizes near the door for carrying items like bulbs, tools, harvested vegetables and potted flowers in or out of the garden.

Carrying task-related items together reduces the number of trips you need to make back and forth during a job.

After you've gotten organized, keep track of things that still frustrate you and find a new solution right away.

A temporary work-around solution becomes just another frustration.

As your garden changes, so will your needs. Finding solutions right away will give you more time for spending in the garden.

Contemporary plan offers large living space plus tons of storage

Special to The Gleaner

A handsome and stately contemporary plan, the Reynolds offers close to 4,000 square feet of indoor living space, plus a three-car garage with plenty of storage.

Smooth painted columns support the graceful entry. Stepped brick detailing rims arched openings to windows and doors, while sidelights and transoms provide sparkling accents to the lofty entry.

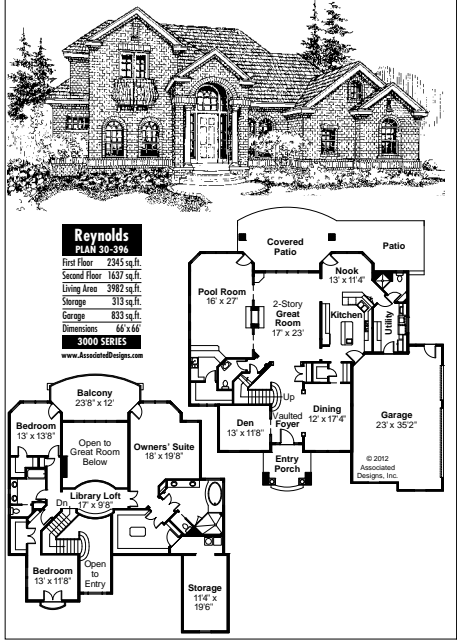

Stepping inside the vaulted foyer, you can't help being impressed by the sense of spaciousness. The ceiling here angles up to two stories high in the great room, which is straight ahead. A loft/library bridges and overlooks the first floor, front and back.

To the left of the foyer is a den (or home office). On the right, a wide arched opening leads into the dining room, which is linked to the kitchen via a pass through with a built-in buffet. A large walk-in pantry is opposite the buffet.

The kitchen and nook are bright and spacious. A raised conversation bar defines the two spaces, and an eating bar rims one side of a work island with a vegetable sink. The adjacent utility room is larger than most, and has a bathroom specially designed for cleaning up after coming in with muddy footwear and/or clothes.

A two-sided fireplace can be enjoyed from the great room as well as the pool-room, which has a full bar with a bottle storage closet behind it. Pocket doors on both sides of the fireplace allow the two large rooms to be opened or closed to each other.

All of the bedrooms are upstairs. Each boasts direct balcony access plus a walk-in closet.

Staying focused

■ Help your child develop ‘executive function’

By Sarah Welch and Alicia Rockmore
getbuttonedup.com

Parent-teacher conference season has arrived. If you have children in grade school, that means it's time to cram yourself into a tiny little chair and get the report from the teacher. For some parents, these conferences are bound to raise anxiety levels, especially if the words “weak executive function” are spoken.

The term “executive function” refers to those neurologically based skills that involve mental control and self-regulation.

A child with a well-developed executive function can manage tasks like writing a paper or completing homework on time without much difficulty. She has the ability to control her impulses so that she stays focused and attains her goal.

Here are six things that you can start implementing right away to help your child develop this all-important organizational function.

1. Clean your home environment: Before you focus on what's wrong with your child, take a look around your home. Do you have clutter zones? Does your child have an organized space for doing homework? Is her room a disaster?

Go to work as a family on organizing the environment. Banish clutter in bedrooms and in common rooms. Set up a homework station where all schoolwork will be done consistently.

2. Take greater control with routines: Is your household going in a million different directions all the time? Does your child have a series of routines that he does regularly? If not, help him improve his control by instituting some basic routines and schedules.

3. Reward him when he overrides his impulses: Rather than waiting to celebrate when a task or goal is completed, reward your child for making consistent progress.

Pay particular attention as he is working, and if you notice him controlling impulses, praise him for his attention and effort.

Then when he has completed a task, make sure you mention how proud you are of him for sticking with it, working through temptation to do something else.

4. Let her fail to read instructions. Instead of expecting your child to obtain skills via observation, let her roll up her sleeves and actually get to work on a task. But be sure to instill in your child that the first step of doing is reading instructions.

The more strongly you can link up the unpleasant side effect of more work with failure to follow guidelines, the better off she will be.

5. Use incentives to amplify lessons. B.F. Skinner demonstrated that positive reinforcement is far more effective than negative reinforcement in bringing about lasting change.

So focus on rewarding the progress your child is making rather than punishing him for failures.

6. Consider seeing a specialist. If your child is exhibiting significant challenges in the areas of impulse and emotional control, she may have a clinically diagnosable disorder. Talk to your pediatrician if you think your child should be tested.

Wristbands too tacky for reception

Q: We're only paying for guests who drink. Our venue suggested they wear bracelets, but that's tacky. Any ideas?

A: Your instincts are right — you can't ask guests to wear wristbands all night, but there is another solution: See if your reception venue will let you pay by consumption instead.

So if you only open 13 bottles of wine, that's all you'll be charged for.

Texas' pro football battle recalled in 'Ten Gallon War'

Special to The Gleaner

When two oil tycoons each start a professional football franchise in Dallas in the same year, a battle the size of Texas is kicked off as each team fights to win the hearts of the state's football fans.

Here are details about "Ten Gallon War" by John Eisenberg and about other new books at the library:

FICTION

"Love Anthony" by Lisa Genova — Olivia Donatelli had just begun to deal with her son's autism when she loses him. Beth Ellis' world is shattered when she finds out her husband and father to her three daughters is leaving her. These two unforgettable women are on the verge of change, and a young boy with unique wisdom helps them both find the courage to move on.

"The Round House" by Louise Erdrich — On a Sunday in the summer of 1988, Geraldine Coutts is attacked on a reservation in North Dakota. She is reluctant to reveal the details of what happened to her husband or her son, Joe. As Joe tries to find out what occurred that day, his mother slips deeper into solitude. Joe has found himself suddenly thrust into the adult world, one for which he is unprepared.

At the library

"Say You're Sorry" by Michael Robotham — Teenage girls Piper Hadley and Tash McBain have disappeared, only to never be found. Three years later during one of the worst blizzards in history, a husband and wife are murdered in the house that Tash McBain once lived in. The suspect in the murders tell them that he was hearing voices and saw a girl being chased by a snowman that night. Convinced that Piper and Tash might be alive, the police reopen the case hoping to save them before it is too late.

NON-FICTION

"America Again: Re-becoming the Greatest We Never Weren't" by Stephen Colbert — Colbert's election-time satire informs readers how the country is "Americeptional" in subjects such as health care, Wall Street, energy and elections.

"Ten Gallon War" by John Eisenberg — In the 1960s, professional football began to flourish, except for in Texas where college football was still king. But two oil tycoons would soon change that by starting their own professional football franchises in Dallas: the NFL's Dallas Cowboys and the AFL's Dallas Texans. Almost overnight, a bitter feud was born.

Ratings look at more than who watched during regular time slot

Online broadcasts, DVR playback affect numbers

By David Bauder
AP television writer

NEW YORK — In an earlier era, the 9.2 million viewers who watched NBC's "Revolution" in its regular time slot on television's premiere week wouldn't impress many television executives.

Now, that number is only part of the story. Add in people who saw the show on DVR playback within the following seven days — numbers released by the Nielsen company on Monday — and the drama about a suddenly electricity-free world was seen by 14.2 million people.

That estimate also includes only a handful of the people who ordered the episode through an on-demand service or who saw it online.

People aren't watching television the way they used to, a transition that has accelerated markedly this fall, making it much harder to judge whether or not a show is successful. "It's quite stunning," said Andy Durwitz, ABC's chief scheduling executive. "We're seeing all of the audience becoming much more sophisticated with the DVR and making their own schedules."

During the first two weeks of the season, digital video recorder usage is up 30 percent over last season, said David Poltrack, top research executive at CBS. That may settle down, he said.

Clearly, the DVR has become an essential tool for people interested in sampling many of the new series that come with a fall season, he said.

Now, when the overnight ratings come in, Poltrack cautions, "you can't read anything from them."

That's not entirely true. You can usually smell a hit pretty quickly, and the same is true of a dog. It's all those shows in between that are more of a mystery.

For the networks, it should teach patience. With extra data to sift through, it may take executives more time to cancel series (only one, CBS' "Made in Jersey," has bit the dust so far this season) and decide whether to extend their initial episode orders, generally the first sign that a new show has a real future.

Some things about "Revolution" made NBC executives suspect it may get a big boost from DVRs, said Jeff Bader, NBC's top scheduling executive. It appeals to men and science fiction fans, both relatively big DVR users. It's also new; given a choice between shows to watch live or later, a viewer will most likely focus on a familiar series first, he said.

Shows on ABC and CBS have increased their audiences by an average of 20 percent when adding in those who watched on

Now arrange the circled letters to form the surprise answer, as suggested by the above cartoon.

Spooky, jiggly treats fit for Halloween

■ Jell-O orange slices make healthy snack for your kids

By Sara Moulton
For The Associated Press

I discovered the inspiration for this recipe ages ago in an issue of the Australian edition of Vogue, a magazine I tried to hunt down as often as possible because it had a consistently innovative food section.

Though my Jell-O years already were well behind me, I was struck by the cleverness of this recipe, particularly as a healthy snack for kids, and even more particularly at Halloween.

It couldn't be much simpler: two ingredients, no added sugar. You combine fresh orange juice with unflavored gelatin, then chill the mixture in the empty orange shells.

Once the shells are cut up, the individual wedges are ringers for actual orange slices, except that they jiggle in a slightly spooky, Halloween-ish way. (There's nothing spooky about the way they taste.)

Virtually any member of the orange citrus family is a likely candidate for jiggly wedge-dom at Halloween: clementines, tangerines and tangelos. And the aptly-named blood orange, of course, is tailor-made for the job.

If you're moved to stray from the recipe, one proportion should not change — you will need one package of gelatin for every 1 ¾ cups of strained fruit juice.

I've also included an adult variation on this recipe — the addition of vodka. If using, be certain to measure it out carefully. More than the suggested 1 ½ ounces of vodka and the gelatin won't set up.

Finally, don't save these for Halloween. Minus the vodka, this is a perfectly kid-friendly after-school snack any day of the year.

JIGGLY ORANGE WEDGES

Time: 4 hours 20 minutes (20 minutes active)
Servings: 6

INGREDIENTS
3	navel oranges
2	juice oranges (such as Valencia)
1	envelope unflavored gelatin
1½	ounces vodka (optional)
DIRECTIONS

- 1 Cut all 5 oranges in half crosswise, then carefully juice them. Do not crush the skins of the navel oranges. Strain the juice through a mesh colander, then measure out 1 ¾ cups.
- 2 Carefully scrape out and discard the pulp from the navel orange halves to form 6 half shells. Set aside.
- 3 In a small saucepan, combine ¼ cup of the juice with the gelatin. Set aside for 5 minutes to let the gelatin dissolve. Heat the mixture over low heat, stirring occasionally, until the gelatin is dissolved and the mixture is clear, 3 to 4 minutes. Whisk in the remaining juice and the vodka, if using. Transfer the liquid to a measuring cup or small pitcher to make it easy to pour.
- 4 Arrange the orange shells, cut side up, in muffin tins or ramekins (to keep them upright). Divide the mixture between the shells, filling them halfway. Set the muffin tin in the refrigerator, then finish filling the oranges. Depending on the size of your oranges, you may only be able to fill 5 shells.
- 5 Cover the filled shells with plastic wrap and chill until firm, at least 4 hours and preferably overnight. Cut each half into 3 wedges before serving.

Glass of eyeball punch or a shot of orange haze?

■ Holiday drinks should be creepy, as well as delicious

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

It's not enough for Halloween drinks to be delicious. They also have to be creepy.

And that's where we drew our inspiration for these beverages — a kid-friendly, delightfully slimy grape "eyeball" punch and a not-so-kid-friendly murky and thick "orange haze" that blends orange liqueur, chocolate liqueur and honey.

To up the creep factor of the eyeball punch, you can peel the grapes before adding them to the other ingredients. There are two ways to do this.

You can freeze the grapes (wash them, then arrange them on a rimmed baking sheet keeping them apart, then freeze), then run them under warm water to loosen the skins.

Alternatively, you can plunge fresh grapes first into boiling water, then into ice water to loosen the skins.

GRAPE EYEBALL PUNCH

Start to finish: 2 hours (15 minutes active)
Servings: 12

INGREDIENTS
8	cups grape juice
2	cinnamon sticks
1	tablespoon whole cloves
1	tablespoon whole allspice

Glasses of a Halloween beverage, Orange Haze, blends liqueur and honey.

3	1-inch slices fresh ginger
3	cups green grapes, peeled or not
3	12-ounce bottles ginger beer or ale, chilled
DIRECTIONS

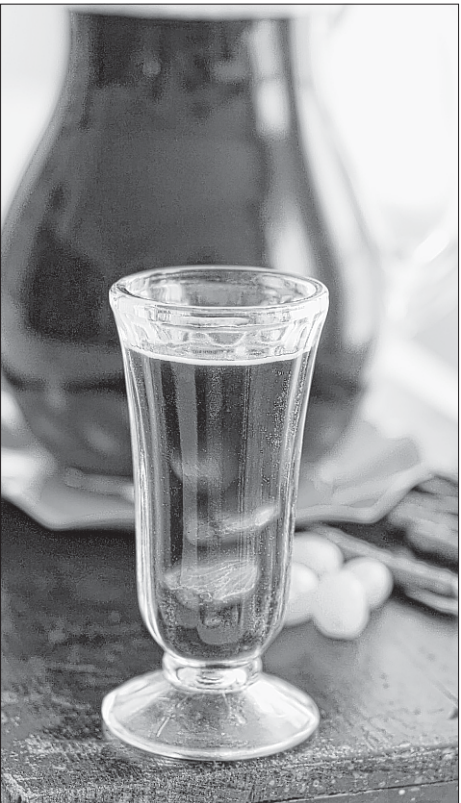

- 1 In a large saucepan over medium heat, combine the grape juice, cinnamon sticks, cloves, allspice and ginger. Bring to a simmer, then remove from the heat. Allow to cool to room temperature, at least 1 hour.
- 2 Strain out and discard the seasonings, then transfer to a large pitcher or punch bowl and chill until cold. Once chilled, add the grapes and ginger beer or ale.

ORANGE HAZE

Start to finish: 10 minutes
Servings: 1

INGREDIENTS
¾	ounce orange liqueur
¾	ounce milk chocolate cream liqueur

Grape Eyeball Punch ups the creep factor with floating grapes.

½	teaspoon honey
DIRECTIONS

- 1 Pour the orange liqueur into a shot glass.
- 2 Very slowly pour the chocolate liqueur down the side of the glass, then drizzle the honey over the top. Garnish with orange zest.

Tomato Basil Bisque great addition to any soup night

This Sunday of the year is always a fun day at church when my women's circle hosts an annual soup and sandwich luncheon following services.

The cooks bring their batch of soup in a slow cooker and we plug them in, hoping against hope that circuit breakers do not trip and we end up with cold soup by the time the guests are ready for their grilled cheese sandwich and bowl of soup.

The event is to support our youth group's projects, so we certainly don't want anything to stand in the way of that effort.

It's always fun to see what type of soup the Circle members bring. Some members have a specialty they always contribute, and people look forward to the opportunity to sample them again.

Soups in that category include Green Pepper Soup, Beefy Wild Rice Soup, Chunky Italian Vegetable Soup, Split Pea Soup and — a recent new favorite — Roasted Red Pepper Soup.

Other cooks like to experiment and use it as an opportunity to try new things or offer something to fill out the menu.

I've been pondering what to take, since the choices are vast and I haven't met many types of soup that I do not like.

But I have to admit that I've been thinking a lot lately about a soup I tried recently while on a trip to Maine.

The Jordan Pond House at Acadia National Park is famous for a few things — notably their popovers, but also their Tomato Basil Bisque.

I can't quit thinking about it mostly because it's easy, comforting for a chilly fall evening and a great soup to have with grilled cheese, after all.

Plus, if you've still got basil flourishing in your herb garden, it's a great chance to use it.

Here are a couple of easy recipes for Tomato Basil Bisque:

TOMATO BASIL SOUP

Serves: 9

INGREDIENTS
2	cans (28 ounce) crushed tomatoes
1	can (14.5 ounces) chicken broth
18	fresh basil leaves, minced
1	teaspoon sugar
1	cup whipping cream
½	cup butter or margarine
DIRECTIONS

- 1 In a large saucepan, bring the tomatoes and broth to a boil. Reduce heat; cover and simmer for 10 minutes. Add basil and sugar.

- 2 Reduce heat to low; stir in cream and butter. Cook until butter is melted.

TOMATO BASIL BISQUE

3	cloves of garlic, minced
2	tablespoons of olive oil
2	cans (14 ounces each) crushed tomatoes
1	can (14 ounces) whole tomatoes
2	cups of stock (chicken or vegetable)
1	teaspoon of sea salt
1	teaspoon of sugar
½	teaspoon of fresh ground black pepper
¼	cup of heavy cream
3	tablespoons of fresh basil, julienned
	Parmesan cheese

DIRECTIONS
1	In a saucepan, saute garlic in olive oil on medium heat for 1 minute, being careful not to burn the garlic. Add the crushed tomatoes. Add the whole tomatoes one at a time, squeezing them into the pan to break them up.
2	Add the juice from the whole tomatoes, as well. Add chicken stock, salt, pepper and sugar.
3	Cook the soup on medium at a simmer for 10 minutes.
4	To finish, reduce the heat to low and stir in heavy cream and basil.

Get creative to save on family, friends' Christmas gifts

By Kasey Trenum
Time2Saveworkshops.com

Q: I started my Christmas shopping a month ago, and now I'm worried I didn't get an early enough start and do not want to go into debt or skimp on quality. How can I save money while still treating my loved ones to those gifts that will make their eyes light up?

A: Everyone loves the holidays. Especially me! But I don't want to have to take out a second mortgage just to buy Christmas gifts. The good news is that there are tons of ways to save money during the Christmas season. I can't even begin to cover them all here, but below are some of my favorite ways to save money in preparation for the holidays.

■ Amazon: Last year I ordered all my kids' presents from Amazon. By catching deals as they came, I saved close to 40 percent off retail prices, and I didn't have to stand in any lines. Plus, my nice UPS man brought every single one right to my front door. It was fabulous.

■ Online Deals: The online savings don't stop with Amazon. Throughout the year we post online deals on Time2SaveWorkshops.com. Take advantage of them as they come, and you'll be able to stash away a little at a time in the months leading up to Christmas.

Things such as free photo books, nursing covers, custom stationery, baby slings, memory boxes and personalized journals pop up all the time. So get creative.

Make sure you snag these deals when you see them, and you'll have Christmas presents wrapped and under the tree before you know it.

■ Weekly Freebies: We all know that grocery and drug stores work on sale cycles. Each week there are a few key things that we can stock up on either very cheaply or even free.

So what happens when these free items are candles, nail polish, snacks, art supplies or even cleaning supplies? You can use these fun freebies to stock your gift closet.

It's all in the presentation: Pair a scented candle with some nail polish for a teacher or co-worker; fill a popcorn bucket with candy and a cheap DVD for a family gift, or create a gift basket of cleaning supplies for a friend that has moved. The options are endless if you get creative.

Get in the habit of checking daily deal sites such as Groupon or Plum District for great restaurant vouchers, movie tickets and more. Also, use Ebates to get cash back any time you're shopping online.

These are just some ideas that make it possible to have an amazing Christmas while staying on budget. So start now — keep your eyes open, watch for the deals and by Christmas you'll be ready to give joyfully.

Zucchini muffin fit for any meal

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

This savory muffin studded with zucchini and cheddar cheese pairs as wonderfully with dinner as it does breakfast. And consider taking advantage of all that extra zucchini piling up in the garden by baking a double batch. The moisture from the zucchini means these muffins freeze well.

Want to make a whole-grain version? Substitute regular whole-wheat flour for half of the all-purpose flour. Or go all the way and use white whole-wheat flour in place of all of the all-purpose.

White whole-wheat flour has the same nutrition as regular whole wheat, but is made from a lighter grain that produces a flour that tastes and looks similar to white.

Start to finish: 45 minutes
Servings: 12

INGREDIENTS
2¼	cups all-purpose flour
1½	teaspoons baking powder
½	teaspoon baking soda
¼	cup sugar
1	teaspoon salt
2	eggs
1¼	cups buttermilk
½	cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, melted
1	cup packed shredded zucchini
¾	cup shredded sharp cheddar cheese

DIRECTIONS
1	Heat the oven to 400 F. Line a 12-cup muffin pan with paper liners or coat with baking spray.
2	In a large bowl, whisk together the flour, baking powder, baking soda, sugar and salt.
3	In another bowl, whisk together the eggs and buttermilk, then whisk in the melted butter. Gently fold the liquid mixture into the dry mixture, then fold in the zucchini and cheddar just enough to incorporate.
4	Scoop the batter into the prepared muffin pan and bake

Try to get omega-3 from EPA, DHA

Food Network Kitchens

Q: I've heard that omega-3 fats are good for me. What's the story?

A: Here's a refresher on why omega-3s do the body good. There are three main types of omega-3 fats, typically referred to by their abbreviated names DHA, EPA and ALA.

The DHA and EPA types are plentiful in fish and help fight inflammation. They also contribute to heart health, brain function and immunity. ALA is found mostly in plant-based foods.

The body converts ALA to a small amount of DHA and EPA. To really reap the benefits of omega-3, you want to make sure to get most of them from EPA and DHA.

Experts recommend getting about 1,000 milligrams of omega-3s per day, mostly from DHA and EPA.

■ Salmon
Salmon is one of the best fish choices for healthful fats. A 4-ounce (raw) portion will serve up more than 1,600 milligrams of DHA and EPA.

■ Flax
The tiny seeds pack a flavorful punch and 1 tablespoon has over 2,300 milligrams of ALA omega-3. Drizzle flax oil over salads or add a few drops to a soup or smoothie.

■ Tuna
The meaty texture and mild flavor of fresh tuna is hard to beat. Plus, a 3-ounce (raw) portion has 1,100 milligrams of omega-3.

■ Walnuts
One-fourth cup of walnuts has 2,600 milligrams of ALA. Snack on raw or dry-roasted walnuts solo or add some to salads, pesto sauce, zucchini bread or muffin recipes.

■ Eggs
Chickens are often fed omega-3-rich foods that boost the content in the eggs they produce. Depending on the brand, an egg can vary anywhere from 40 to 250 milligrams of DHA and EPA. Whatever eggs you choose, just don't skip the yolk — that's where all those healthy fats are hiding.

■ Chia
A tablespoon of chia seeds has nearly 2,400 milligrams of ALA. Use in similar fashion as flax.

■ Canola
This light and versatile oil is a pantry staple. It has 1,200 milligrams of ALA per tablespoon. The neutral flavor and high smoke point of canola oil make it a perfect choice for salad dressings, baking, frying and even piecrust.

Put coffee back in coffeecake for added flavor

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

Adding coffee to coffeecake is a simple way to take something great and make it even better.

Because if you think conventional coffeecakes pair well with your favorite cup of java, wait until you try a coffeecake spiked with coffee.

Still not enough jolt for you? Head to the grocer's coffee aisle and grab a jar of instant espresso powder, then substitute that for the instant coffee

COFFEE COFFEECAKE
Start to finish: 1 hour (20 minutes active)
Servings: 12

FOR THE TOPPING:
¼	cup (½ stick) butter, room temperature
2	tablespoons sugar
	Pinch salt
½	teaspoon vanilla extract
½	cup all-purpose flour

FOR THE CAKE:
2	tablespoons instant coffee granules
2	tablespoons water

1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, room temperature
1 cup sugar
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 cup sour cream

DIRECTIONS
1	Heat the oven to 350 F. Coat a 9-by-9-inch baking pan with baking spray.
2	To make the topping, in a medium bowl use an electric mixer to beat together the butter, sugar, salt and vanilla until creamy. Add the flour and mix just until moist crumbs form. Set aside in the refrigerator.
3	To prepare the cake, in a medium bowl mix the coffee granules and water until dissolved. Add the cinnamon, vanilla, butter, sugar, baking powder, baking soda and salt. Use an electric mixer to beat until fluffy. Beat in the eggs, one at a time, scraping the bowl between additions.
4	Stir in half the flour followed by half the sour cream, then the remaining flour and sour cream. Spread the batter evenly in the prepared pan. Sprinkle the cake batter with the topping. Bake for 35 to 40 minutes.

5 Let cool in the pan. Serve warm or at room temperature.

Think 'green' when planning for Halloween

Halloween can be a lot of fun, but can be costly not only to your pocket book but also to the environment.

Think green this Halloween! These tips will help you treat your pocket book and the Earth right on this spooky night.

Costumes: Reuse costumes or design new costumes using clothes and materials you already have. Hold a costume swap party.

Trade costumes from previous years with friends and neighbors. Shop at yard sales and thrift shops for clothing and accessories to make or embellish your costume. Donate old costumes to local charities.

Decorations: Save and reuse Halloween decorations from year to year. Use items from your backyard. Hay bales, mums, pumpkins, gourds, fodder shocks and dried flowers, leaves and branches can be used throughout autumn, and then composted once the season is over. Witches, bats and skeletons made from everyday materials, such as cotton balls, egg cartons and cardboard, are great craft projects for kids.

Trick or Treat: Make homemade goodies, such as cookies, caramel apples and popcorn balls, for family and friends (and their little ghosts and goblins). Purchase treats that have a minimal amount of packaging to reduce waste.

Instead of candy, buy pencils made from recycled materials to hand out. Buy items you and your family will enjoy, just in case you have leftovers.

Put wishes in writing to exclude family from funeral

Dear Amy: Later this month I am facing major surgery on my heart and other things. As with any operation, there is risk involved, and I realize I might die.

My oldest sister and I don't get along. I am not rich enough for her to care about. I have tried to make peace with her to no avail.

Now, because my time might be up, I have written what kind of funeral I want, and I don't want her or her family to attend.

I know my funeral would not meet her expectations, as it will be a "green" funeral. I don't want a fancy casket, just a wooden box to be buried in.

My main question is, how do I tell her not to come to my funeral? How can I keep her daughters and sons-in-law away from it, also?

— John

Dear John: If this opera-

AMY DICKINSON

tion has you pondering your funeral, shouldn't it also be the occasion to make choices about your life? I won't insult you by urging you to reconcile with your sister, though I do urge you to forgive her.

If you definitely want to refuse entrance to some family members at your funeral, the best way is to note your wishes in writing and give a copy of this to the person you most trust to represent your wishes after your death.

Many people have "private" funerals, which are basically invitation-only events that are not announced in any public

The people planning this should be aware of your wishes, and they should notify the director of the funeral home or "green" burial site of the guest restriction.

Dear Amy: My neighbor's kids play baseball in their backyard, which results in many balls hit into my yard (essentially centerfield). They use aluminum bats and tennis balls. They march right into my yard and retrieve the balls.

In the past this was no problem. However, now they're older (almost teenagers) and they hit every other ball into my yard. I feel invaded and resent it. I want to go over and tell the father that I'm fed up and to tell him to tell his kids to knock it off.

My wife disagrees. She feels I'm being a grumpy old man and doesn't want me to confront my neighbor.

I never know when I'm going to look up and see my neighbor's kids in my backyard. Should I confront my neighbor and request that his kids no longer play baseball?

I thought that keeping some of the balls might send a message, but it seems they need some parental supervision.

— Grumpy Old Man

Dear Grumpy: If these kids are almost teenagers, they will not be receiving parental supervision.

You should go with the "Grumpy Old Man" thing. Tell the kids directly that you're tired of seeing them in your yard all the time and tell their father it's time to either install a net or to reorient centerfield toward their house instead of yours.

Be honest and say, "Frankly, this is starting to drive me crazy." If your neighbors don't understand your reasoning, they're not trying hard enough, though it might take some time for them to adjust.

Playing whiffle ball would eliminate this problem.

Dear Amy: The letter from "Not Invisible" interested me. Like the woman who wrote this letter, I am finding that with age, I, too, am developing this superpower. At 68, sometimes I feel invisible too.

My biggest gripe is that younger folks seem to think I lost my brains along with my youth (and waistline). It's exhausting to try to prove otherwise.

— Also Not Invisible

Dear Also: As our demographic changes shape, we can hope that these attitudes also will change.

Little office surprises brighten day

Dear Heloise: My coworkers and I always leave treats for each other on our desks. Nothing big — a piece of our favorite candy or a cute notepad, just little things we find. It is such a nice surprise to walk in and find a little something on our desks. It brightens the whole day.

— A Reader in Vermont

Dear Heloise: My pet peeve with manufacturers is the way they keep cutting down on the number of pounds or ounces in a product.

For instance, my macaroni-salad recipe calls for an 8-ounce box of macaroni, yet the boxes now come in 7-ounce size. I find myself doing a lot of guessing and measuring when trying to adapt the old recipes to the new package amounts.

— Faith in Nebraska

Dear Heloise: I love to go camping. I got tired of always having to pack and then unload. I bought a big plastic tub that now holds all my camping gear. I put everything in it that I need for a camping trip: an old pot and pan, matches, rope, toilet paper, batteries, camping shovel, etc.

Then all I have to do is throw it, my tent and the cooler with food in the back of my truck, and I am ready.

Seek God's help to escape grip of alcohol

Dear Dr. Graham: My father was an alcoholic (and not much of a father as a result), so I always said I'd never go down that path. Well, you can guess what's happened — I've become an alcoholic. How did this happen?

— J. McN.

Dear J. McN: Surely one of life's greatest puzzles is why we keep on making bad choices in life, even when we know they'll only hurt us.

Even the Apostle Paul experienced it: "I do not understand what I do. For what I want to do I do not do, but what I hate I do" (Romans 7:15).

I don't know why this has happened to you; I can only guess. I do know, however, that people often turn to alcohol to escape from their problems, and perhaps this is the case with you. After all, you didn't learn from your father how to deal with problems; his answer was to escape from them by turning to alcohol. Now this has become your "solution" (although in reality it only makes your problems worse).

BILLY GRAHAM

The real question, however, is this: What should you do now? You've already taken the first step by admitting you have a problem with alcohol.

Now take the second step by seeking help to deal with your problem. Your doctor or pastor or other professional can point you to programs in your community that have helped others, and may help you.

Don't be ashamed to admit your problem to someone who can help; it will only get worse if you don't.

Most of all, seek God's help. God loves you, and unlike your earthly father, your heavenly Father will always be there to help you.

Begin by asking Jesus Christ to come into your life, and then ask Him to help you become the person He wants you to be.

Easy bruising in young person could be serious issue

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: I am covered with bruises. It looks like I've been in a ring doing mixed martial arts. I haven't. I haven't bumped myself. I do my best to cover them up, but I wonder what's up.

Do you have any idea? I don't feel sick. I'm 27, and never have had a major illness.

— R.F.

Dear R.F.: Easy bruising in an older person comes mostly from loss of protection of tissues that cushion blood vessels. In a younger person, one your age, more serious illnesses have to be considered.

One of those illnesses is immune thrombocytopenic purpura, ITP, formerly called idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura. The name change comes about because the cause of this illness wasn't known. Therefore, it was called "idiopathic" — cause unknown. Now it's known to result from an immune attack on platelets.

DR. DONOHUE

Platelets are the smallest blood cells, whose function is to seal broken blood vessels with a clot. The immune system has attacked blood platelets and diminished their numbers. It also decreases platelet production. "Thrombocytopenia" expresses in one word "platelet deficiency." "Purpura" means "bruises."

In children, ITP comes on suddenly and most often cures itself.

In adults, ITP tends to follow a more chronic course, with periods of sufficient platelets alternating with periods of defective supply.

For you, the important thing is to see a doctor right away. Your platelet count will determine what the next step will be. If your count is above 30,000, observation is the usual course of action. If the count is much less than that, treatment is initiated. And if the count is between 5,000 and 10,000, treatment is urgent.

High doses of the cortisone drug prednisone are the usual treatment. Sometimes it's combined with immunoglobulin. If neither approach restores platelet numbers, the doctor has to turn to other treatments. Removal of the spleen is one of those other treatments.

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: Upon coming out of the shower, I happened to turn my head and saw my back in the mirror. There are about four or five dark-brown to tan blemishes on it. My immediate thought was melanoma. I made an appointment with a dermatologist immediately.

The doctor said that these blotches are not melanoma, but are seborrheic keratoses.

I was relieved, but forgot to ask if seborrheic keratoses turn into cancer. I don't want to call that doctor again. Will you please tell me?

— C.K.

Dear C.K.: Seborrheic keratoses make their appearance after age 50. They're not cancerous and don't become cancer. They're various shades of brown, are about half an inch in diameter and have a rough, warty surface. The back, chest, upper arms and face are the places where they're usually found.

You can have them removed if you wish, but it's not necessary. A doctor can freeze them off or scrape them off.

Dear Drs. Donohue and Roach: Does overuse of sunglasses affect the vision? How about in the future?

My teenage daughter wears hers constantly, inside the house too. I asked her why, and she said she likes the look. She thinks they make her look mature.

— S.M.

Dear S.M.: Constant wearing of sunglasses doesn't damage the eyes. In dimly lit places, your daughter will have a hard time seeing, but I guess she'll maintain her "mature" look.

Outside, wearing sunglasses protects the eyes from ultraviolet light. Make sure she has glasses that filter ultraviolet A and B rays.

Dr. Paul Donohue will be retiring at the end of 2012. Dr. Keith Roach will share the byline during the transition period and assume sole authorship of "To Your Good Health" beginning in January. Readers may write the doctors or request an order form of available health newsletters at P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Storybook marriage proposal finally surprises girlfriend

— Richard Bach

By Matthew Cummings

"Chicken Soup for the Soul: Happily Ever After"

Emily and I met in our first semester of college and dated for almost six years.

Regardless of how crafty and intuitive my ideas, I was never able to surprise her with anything. Emily was investigative and I was naive — not a good combination for a surprise.

Leave it to me to accidentally leave behind a receipt or just happen to be checking voice-mail on a speakerphone when the restaurant or florist would call to confirm.

Time after time, I tried to surprise her. Time after time, I failed.

When I began to think about a long-overdue proposal, I wanted nothing more than to surprise her. So I embarked upon a personal journey to find a unique and special way to pop the question.

After much thought, and some interesting suggestions from friends and co-workers, I decided to incorporate two of Emily's loves — reading (her graduate-school pursuit) and pigs (her favorite animal since childhood) — into a storybook proposal.

My dream was to create and publish a children's book in which two little pigs, Emmy and Matty, would parallel the story of Emily and me.

I was working in public relations for a school district. I asked an art teacher if she knew any students skilled in cartoon illustration. Without hesitation she put me in touch with Jeremy, a 10th-grader who excitedly showed me his portfolio. I hired him on the spot. Page by page, I sent the manuscript to Jeremy for custom drawings. And I began to write.

My story detailed Emmy and Matty's journey through the years. On page eight, the two little pigs find themselves in front of a sunset.

"One fall evening, Matty had an important question for Emmy," the page read. The proposal page followed.

Upon completion of the illustrations, text and layout of the story, my creation was ready to be printed. It came back in the form of a real book, hardbound. I had done it. I successfully produced the entire book in complete secrecy. After all these years, I would surprise Emily.

On a random Thursday, I told Emily I had found a couple of cute children's books on sale for her collection.

Naturally she wanted to take a look, so the first one I gave her was "The Story of the Two Little Pigs."

As she read the first couple of pages, she started to catch on that I had written a book for her, but had no idea it would change both of our lives forever.

As she approached the proposal page, I asked her to stand up. I bent down on one knee as I watched her eyes follow the words on the paper that simply said, "Emily Suzanne ...Will You Marry Me?" She was speechless as she looked up and saw me with a ring in my hand.

Stunned, she closed the book and gave me a big hug. "Yes, yes and yes! Of course. I love you!"

We hugged for a couple of minutes, and I wiped the tears from her eyes. I urged her to turn to the last page of her storybook proposal — an illustration of pigs dressed in wedding gown and tuxedo.

It read, in appropriate storybook fashion: "Emmy and Matty lived happily ever after."

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY:

(Oct. 21). You'll act on your ideas, which will set you apart from the crowd. Swift decision-making this month contributes to your success. Family brags about you in November. January highlights your individuality and style. Romantic hopefuls love the way you put your own spin on things. Someone invests in you in May. Aries and Capricorn people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 12, 39, 44 and 13.

ARIES: (March 21-April 19). Right now you will learn best from your peers. So look for someone who possesses the skill you want to master, knows it well and is in other ways very much like you.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 20). You can't always choose the people you surround yourself with, but if you could, they would be the same people who are around you today. Taking in so much love is good for your health.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 21). Too much thinking, and you'll lose a game. Instead of trying to figure out why you know something, just act on what you know. You can trust that there are unseen forces of good guiding you.

CANCER: (June 22-July 22). You'll be happily exposed to the different things that interest you. Also, you'll discover a simple way to accomplish what you thought would be hard work. You just need to ask the right question of the right person.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 22). Events will reinforce recent life lessons, giving you the feeling that you are truly on track with your evolution. The best part is that you love who you are on the way to who you're becoming.

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). If you feel uncharacteristically flighty, go with the new mood. It's really acceptable to let your attention float to what is intangible and of seemingly little use. Such reflections are the essence of creativity.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Because it's the last day of the sun in your sign for this year, you'll feel inspired to take your chances. You'll get the sense that it may be a while before opportunities such as these come around again.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The sun headed toward your part of the zodiac will redefine your relationship with time and space. You'll be reminded of your vital need for inner quiet and the time to ponder life's mysteries.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). The day brings many gifts, and you'll be in the mood to unwrap them. The effort it takes to get to the heart of a matter is well worth it. Don't be too careful. Dig in.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The truth is that you enjoy taking care of others. Of course, it's always a little easier when you know your efforts in this regard are appreciated.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll learn by making things. The hands-on experience is unbeatable. Your stellar attitude is part of the reason why everything you touch turns to gold today.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 20). There is nothing to be gained from over-scheduling yourself. By trying to maximize the quantity of today's interactions you will only minimize the quality of those connections. Less is more.

Take safety precautions to reduce risk of falling

By Rose Russell
Toledo Blade

Pam Toto proves that a person doesn't have to be elderly and frail to fall. The University of Pittsburgh professor of occupational therapy was a fit 43-year-old when she learned that firsthand while descending a staircase.

"It was dark, I had heels on and was in an unfamiliar environment," she said, recalling that day two years ago. Her heel caught on a step and she pitched forward, landing on her hand and fracturing her wrist. It required surgery.

"What we know in general is that falls are caused by a lot of different reasons," Toto said. "The research strongly tells us that there are multiple factors that contribute to falls, and environment is one of the risk factors."

Good lighting and switches at the top and bottom of stairs — and handrails on both sides of the stairs — are vital, said Robyn Pitock, an occupational therapist working in metropolitan Toledo, Ohio.

Other measures will minimize the risk of falling:

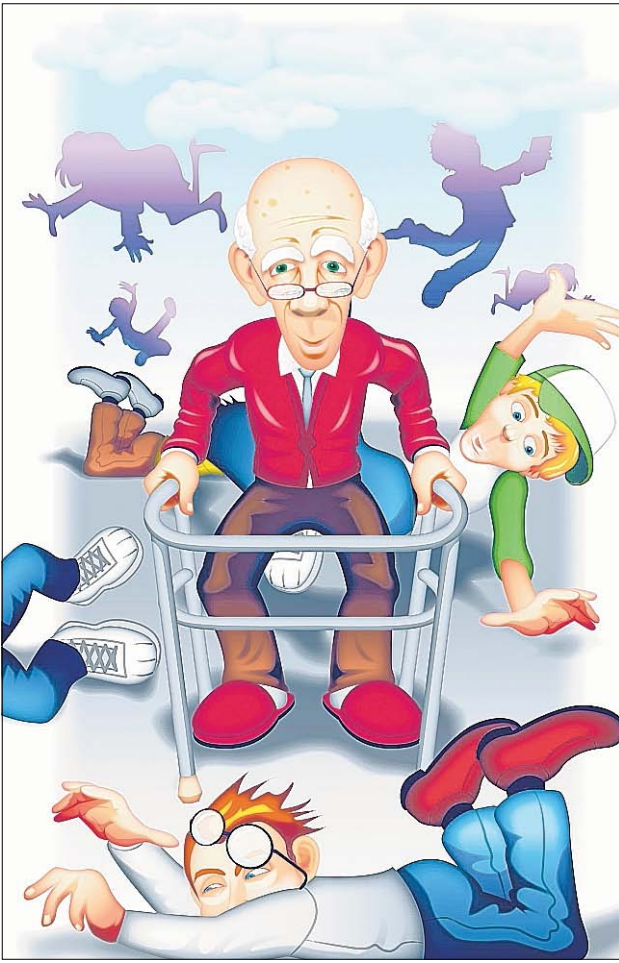

■ Clear stairs and floors of clutter and securely fasten throw rugs.

■ Remove electrical cords from walkways. Use nightlights and keep a lamp by the bed.

■ Choose and arrange furniture to meet the needs of the home's occupants. "The height of the chair or bed shouldn't be below the height of the back of your knee," said Pitock.

■ Add grab bars and other safety rails where necessary.

One out of three older adults falls in this country every year. It is a serious issue among senior citizens but not limited to older people.

Washington, Ohio, recalled working with a builder who showed her a drawing for a bathroom modification.

"He added a grab bar behind the toilet, when in fact a man needs grab bars on both sides," Goldhammer said.

■ Watch out for uneven sidewalks, wet leaves and chairs not pushed back under a table as they all can pose risks.

■ Select appropriate footwear. High-heeled shoes are obvious culprits, but slippers and open-toe shoes also can cause stumbles.

Toto said other factors that play a role in falls might have to do with walking speed, medications or individuals' cognitive abilities.

She recommends annual eye exams help to prevent falls.

Exercise also can help prevent falls, said Natalie Leland, an assistant professor of occupational therapy at the University of Southern California.

"It's important to continue to be active and make sure we are living healthy lifestyles and engaging in activities that are important to us."

Try Mac operating system's underused tools for dictation, text-to-speech

Taking dictation and converting text to speech are just two of the cool but underused options that Apple has built into your Mac operating system. Read on if you're ready to unleash your Mountain Lion.

■ Dictation and text-to-speech. Imagine how quickly you could reply to Aunt Edna's email if you could talk instead of type. Click the Apple menu in the top left corner and select System Preferences. Choose the Dictation & Speech icon.

Use the Dictation tab to turn it on and set a shortcut to launch (such as "Press Left Command Key Twice"). You can speak continuously for up to 30 seconds — that's a lot of text.

Explore the Text to Speech tab if you like to multitask. Activate "Speak selected text when the key is pressed" and choose a key to launch (the default is Option + Esc).

Your Mac will read to you — that accounting report or lengthy email from your college roommate — while you prune your bonsai tree.

You can choose a system voice, have alerts or application notifications announced, and even have the clock broadcast the time to break you from your Facebook stupor and remind you to get back to work.

■ Add secret services to your default services list: Launch an application such as Safari or Pages and click on the application name in the upper left Finder bar. Choose Services, then Services Preferences for a list of options in your default Services menu.

Capture Full Screen lets you easily obtain an image of whatever's onscreen, or activate Capture Screen Using Timer to get images at certain times or intervals.

Check the box next to "Summarize" to speed-read through lengthy documents. To do so, select the text, click on the name of the application you're using to view the material (such as Safari), choose services and then summarize. You'll get an abbreviated version that you can pare further using the Summary Size scroll to increase or decrease the length of the summary.

Customize text "hot keys": If you find yourself typing the same things repetitively (such as your email address or a closing salutation in correspondence), create a hot key to recall the text automatically.

From the System Preferences menu, choose the Language & Text icon and select the Text tab. From the list of default symbol and text substitutions, choose which one you'd like to activate. Or, click the + in the lower left corner of the panel to add your own.

Note: This works in Apple default apps such as Pages and can be activated in Safari by clicking Edit-Substitutions and enabling Text Replacement.

Third-party applications such as Microsoft Word may not support your custom hot keys.

Encrypt a flash or external hard drive: Encrypting data you've transferred to a flash drive or external hard drive keeps it from falling into the wrong hands should your portable device be lost or stolen.

Connect the device you wish to encrypt, find its icon on your desktop and right-click on it. A dialogue box will appear with an option for Encrypt "<device name>." Select it, and a dialogue box will prompt you to select a password and password hint.

Encryption is time consuming — expect 5 GB to take 30 minutes or more, depending on your system's capabilities. This feature also requires the device to have a GUID Partition Table, so you may have to format the drive before you transfer data and encrypt.

Technology can help out with reaching your fitness goals

By Michael Felberbaum
AP business writer

RICHMOND, Va. — Many of us know firsthand that losing weight and staying fit can be tough.

For me, I started a journey a little over a year ago to get in better shape before my 30th birthday.

While diet and exercise were the ultimate keys to my success, technology played an important role in keeping me accountable, tracking my progress and making my workouts more effective.

Now that I've reached some of my fitness goals, I'd like to share the tools I used. These will be more important to me than ever as I try to maintain my weight loss and improve my strength and endurance. (Cue the "Rocky" theme song).

ACCOUNTABILITY

Diet and exercise are the most important parts of losing weight or staying in shape. Technology helped me keep tabs on what I was eating and how many calories I was burning.

I used MyFitnessPal, a free service that lets you maintain a digital diary of your food choices, cardio work and strength training.

The service is very simple to use. Because you can update entries using a phone app or a website, you have almost no excuse not to enter the information no matter where you are.

Apps are available for the iPhone, the iPad and Android, BlackBerry and Windows Phone devices.

When first using the program, you're prompted for such information as weight, height, age and activity level.

That's used to create a plan for how many calories you should eat and what percentage should come from protein, fat or carbohydrates. You can also set your own parameters.

You then enter what you're eating (and drinking) for breakfast, lunch and dinner, as well as snacks, throughout the day, and the app records the calories, fat, protein, carbs and vitamins.

MyFitnessPal has an extensive list of fresh and packaged foods to choose from. Choose an apple or a can of Campbell's soup, and MyFitnessPal will add the nutritional information to your count.

The database also includes popular recipes found in magazines, so you don't have to enter the ingredients individually.

You can even copy an entire meal to another day if you're a creature of habit like me. Or use your phone's camera to take a picture of a barcode and have the app look up the nutritional information for you.

But food is half the battle. MyFitnessPal also lets you enter your workouts and strength training. Just as you do with food, you simply select the activity, such as cleaning, walking the dog, taking a spinning class or, for me, playing ice hockey.

Based on your personal health information, the service calculates the number of calories burned. While the numbers are only estimates, they provide a pretty solid guideline.

Once you're done entering your information, you can look at charts, graphs and lists of your diet and exercise to get a better view of your day or week.

The app will project your weight in five weeks and tell you whether you're eating too few or too many calories on any given day.

You can even connect with friends and relatives who also are using the service to help keep you even more accountable and get ideas of different foods to try or activities to do.

PROGRESS

While recording my food and exercise choices became part of my daily routine, tracking my progress helped motivate me to stay on track to getting in better shape.

For this, I enlisted the use of the Withings Wi-Fi Body Scale ($159.99).

This is no ordinary scale. It not only measures your weight, body fat, lean muscle and Body Mass Index, but it also connects to the Internet so you can keep track of your measurements through its website or an iPhone app (iPad and Android versions are coming soon).

You can see how you compare to your personal goals and recommended health zones. You can have the scale automatically share your data with other online health coaching programs, or post results to a blog, Facebook or Twitter. There are no subscription fees.

The scale can track up to eight different people, with separate accounts for each.

A new version of the scale will be able to connect directly to your phone via Bluetooth.

For those with iPhones or iPads, there also is a companion blood pressure monitor that hooks directly to your device and lets you know how your rates compare with normal ranges.

EFFECTIVE WORKOUTS

Logging how many calories you burned during any activity can be a constant guessing game.

Many gym-goers rely on general numbers that the treadmill, bicycles or elliptical machines provide, but those aren't always accurate.

There are several options to help track your daily exercise routines. After trying a few different wearable monitors, including the Nike+ FuelBand, I found the most helpful tool was a heart rate monitor.

Basic monitors in the $100 price range can encourage people to get active, while options costing more than $400 are available with accessories that can measure how far you're running or how fast you're cycling. I tested a Polar RCX5 ($349.95 for a basic set, with accessories for GPS and cycling available).

After entering my height, weight and age, I strapped on the elastic band around my chest and clipped in the heart rate monitor that transmits data wirelessly to a unit on my wrist.

After you choose a sport for that workout, such as running, cycling or swimming, the Polar times your workout and tracks your calories burned based on your heart rate. It also estimates what percentage of the burned calories came from fat. I found that moderate activities seem to burn more fat, but fewer calories, while higher-intensity workouts burn more calories, but less fat.

Some of the machines at my gym picked up the information from my monitor and displayed my heart rate.

When running outside or playing ice hockey, the heart rate monitor also gave me a better idea of how many calories I was burning (more than 1,000 calories in one hockey game).

When you're done with a workout, all of the exercise information you record can be transferred through your computer to Polar's personal training website, where it's analyzed and tracked to help you reach fitness goals and train more effectively.

Knowing about how many calories I burned during a given activity helped make my workouts more effective and understand how I needed to fuel my body accordingly.

EXTRAS

Let's face it: Going to the gym can get kind of boring. But listening to music, or watching movies and TV shows on your mobile devices, can help keep you motivated while working out at the gym, jogging with the dog or getting pumped up for a hockey game.

And even then, it's important to have the right equipment.

For me, the PowerBeats by Dre ($149.95) stood the sweat test and still provided great sound and the option to answer phone calls and control volume from the earphones.

In the locker room, I paired my iPhone to the Jawbone Jambox ($199.99) to stream music via Bluetooth before and after ice hockey games. This season's postgame song is "Closing Time" by Semisonic, as our games typically end after midnight.

■ Brand's reputation often at stake

By Mae Anderson
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Nike forgave Tiger Woods after he apologized for cheating on his wife.

It welcomed back Michael Vick once he served time for illegal dog-fighting.

But the company dropped Lance Armstrong faster than the famed cyclist could do a lap around the block.

What's the difference? A marketer's prerogative.

The world's largest clothing and footwear maker has stood by athletes through a number of scandals over the years, but last week it became the first company to sever ties with Armstrong in the wake of allegations that he used illegal drugs to boost his performance during his 20-plus year racing career.

At least five other companies followed Nike's lead, highlighting the tricky relationship that evolves when marketers sign multimillion-dollar deals for celebrities and athletes to endorse their products.

Everything a celebrity endorser says and does could negatively impact the company they represent. And when something goes wrong, companies act as the judge and jury when deciding whether to continue those deals. They consider everything from the offense itself to the fallout.

"The tighter the association and the more intimate the relationship, it can sort of be like breaking up a marriage," said Allen Adamson, managing director of branding firm Landor Associates.

Endorsement deals have been around for decades. The value of such deals are a closely held secret, but companies often are willing to shell out millions of dollars for celebrities to wear their shoes, use their equipment or appear in their commercials.

The practice is even more common in the world of sports, where companies are willing to do almost anything to have their brand associated with the high performance of a top athlete. Think: Adidas sneaker maker's deal with soccer player David Beckham or General Mills' deal to have Olympic Gold medalist Gabby Douglas appear on a box of Wheaties cereal.

Companies typically include some sort of "morals clause" in the deals. The specific language can vary, but the clause basically allows a company to cancel the contract if a celebrity does something that reflects poorly on the brand — or the celeb themselves.

History is dotted with companies dropping celebs after their indiscretions. In 1986, the American Beef Industry Council dropped Cybil Shepherd as its spokeswoman when she told an interviewer she tried to avoid red meat in her diet.

"It's really hard to know today when an issue will spin out of control or just go away," said Adamson, the branding expert. "The cost of a celebrity endorsement is huge, so pulling the plug is a really big decision."

When a company does decide to end the relationship with a celebrity endorser, the stars often bow out without a fight. But sometimes letting go of a celeb can cause even more problems.

For example, Hanes underwear company dropped Pittsburgh Steelers running back Rashard Mendenhall from its lineup in 2011 after he made controversial remarks about the death of Osama bin Laden and the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks over social media websites.

Mendenhall is now suing the company for breach of contract, claiming Hanesbrands wrongly terminated him and seeking $1 million in damages.

Perhaps no other company is better known than Nike for its history of having to decide the marketing fate of the celebrity endorsers that it's staked its reputation on. The company has been endorsing athletes for most of its 48-year history.

Best known for its "Just Do It" slogan, when Nike was founded in 1964 it first got attention by providing shoes to runners. Its first official endorsement was the late-runner Steve Prefontaine in the early 1970s.

But Nike's most high profile endorsement came in the 1980s when former professional basketball player Michael Jordan inked a deal that now is widely seen as one of the most successful endorsements of all time even nine years after he retired.

The company, which is based in Beaverton, Ore., now spends millions on endorsements. Of the $7.4 billion it spent on advertising, promotions and endorsement deals in the fiscal year that ended in May, 11 percent or $800 million, was for endorsements. That included its sponsorship of activities such as college and professional sports teams.

As a result of its large investment in endorsements, Nike has had to make some tough decisions over the years. It stood by golfer Tiger Woods after the golfer admitted to a string of infidelities and had a brief stint in a rehab treatment facility.

In the case of Vick, Nike signed the NFL quarterback to a contract during his rookie year in 2001 but ended that pact in August 2007 after he filed a plea agreement admitting his involvement in a dog-fighting ring.

Then the company re-signed Vick, who now plays with the Philadelphia Eagles, in July 2011. The company said at that time that it didn't condone Vick's actions but was supportive of the positive changes he had made to better himself off the field.

In the latest incident, Nike last week said that it would end its relationship with Armstrong a week after the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency released a massive report detailing allegations of widespread doping by Armstrong and his teams when he won the Tour de France seven consecutive times from 1999 to 2005.

Marketing experts said the likely reason Nike dropped Armstrong boils down to the fact that the cyclist's alleged actions directly related to his sport.

"Nike is about 'just doing it' and that doesn't mean drugs," said Atlanta-based marketing consultant Laura Ries. "It means hard work and ethics and this flew in the face of it."

Nissan adding safety features, electronic steering

■ Proactive advancements touted

By Yuri Kageyama
AP business writer

YOKOSUKA, Japan — Electronically managed steering that completely bypasses the mechanical link of a clutch is among the new safety technology from Japanese automaker Nissan.

Other vehicles are smart enough to park themselves. And some swerve automatically to avoid pedestrians.

Nissan Motor Co. Executive Vice President Mitsuhiro Yamashita said the latest safety advancements are proactive, unlike air bags and other “passive” features that are triggered by a crash.

Next-generation steering uses electronic signals to control tires, not a mechanical link. It’s set to be introduced in an Infiniti luxury model within a year and would be a world first for a commercially produced car.

In the auto industry, the technology is being touted as the biggest innovation in steering since the widespread adoption of power-assisted steering, which uses hydraulics to make turning the wheels easier.

Nissan executives say electronic steering is safer because drivers tend to overcompensate, such as when traveling in gusty wind, and veer off too much. They say the feature also adds to the psychological sense of security for the driver, which in turn contributes to safety because stress is often behind accidents.

With the technology, sensations of bumpy roads get mitigated and steering becomes super-quick and fine-tuned, Nissan said.

Vehicles equipped with electronic steering will still come with a mechanical clutch as a backup that kicks in if the electronic system fails.

Nissan also showed “autonomous emergency steering,” designed to avoid collisions through turns when braking would be too late.

Although many automakers, including Volkswagen AG, Toyota Motor Corp. and Ford Motor Co., offer automatic braking, Nissan’s still experimental system takes the idea a step further to steer away in unexpected situations such as a pedestrian suddenly moving into the path of a vehicle.

But Yamashita acknowledged the technology, which relies on radars and cameras, is still incomplete, and the vehicle still could crash into something else just as it steers away from the pedestrian.

Nissan also showed nifty parking technology that senses if the driver mistakenly steps on the gas pedal instead of the brakes, and corrects that.

Another was automated steering so the car parks without the driver lifting a finger. In a recent demonstration for reporters at a Nissan facility, a Leaf electric vehicle turned on its own and backed into a charging station.

Toru Hatano, analyst at IHS Automotive, believes that safety technology such as automatic stopping before crashes will become more popular even in cheaper models. He said the feature that detects when a driver pushes on the accelerator by mistake would likely be a hit in aging societies such as Japan.

Nissan said it was well on its way to achieving its target of halving deaths and serious injuries from traffic accidents involving Nissan vehicles by 2015, compared with 1995 data. Making that zero is Nissan’s goal. Some 1.3 million people die in car wrecks every year.

New $40,000 amphibious ATV to go on sale soon in U.S.

■ Vehicle speed can hit 45 mph on land, water

By Dee-Ann Durbin
AP auto writer

DETROIT — Amphibious vehicles could soon be zooming out of James Bond’s garage — or pond — and into yours.

The Quadski — a one-person all-terrain vehicle that doubles as a personal watercraft — is being billed by its makers as the first high-speed, commercially available amphibious vehicle.

It’s scheduled to go on sale in the U.S. by the end of this year for around $40,000. Michigan-based Gibbs Sports Amphibians Inc. hopes to sell the vehicle worldwide by 2014.

With its all-terrain tires and four-cylinder, BMW-supplied engine, the Quadski can drive up to 45 miles per hour on land. To take it into the water, the driver presses a button. In five seconds, the four wheels fold up and tuck into the sides. The Quadski can go a brisk 45 miles per hour in the water before a press of the button brings the wheels out again.

The Quadski, a one-person motor boat that also drives on land, is tested recently in Oxford Mich. The vehicle is being billed as the first commercially available, high-speed amphibious vehicle by its makers, Michigan-based Gibbs Technologies.

and keep on going. It’s sort of magic,” the founder of Gibbs Sports Amphibians, Alan Gibbs, told The Associated Press in a recent interview.

History is littered with attempts to make fast, long-lasting amphibious cars, from the campy German Amphicar of the early 1960s to current companies that rework sports cars by hand for $200,000 or more.

But Gibbs, a former diplomat and entrepreneur from New Zealand, says the Quadski is the first land vehicle for sale that can go more than 10 mph in water. A lightweight, fiberglass hull and front wheels that rise mechanically when the vehicle hits the water are among the tricks the Quadski uses.

Gibbs, who has made everything from bras to television sets over a long career in New Zealand and the U.K., launched Gibbs Sports Amphibians 16 years ago after building his own amphibious car and wondering if he could make it on a larger scale.

Since then, the company has spent $200 million, built nine prototypes and amassed more than 300 patents. “It seems so simple, but it’s really difficult,” Gibbs said.

The Quadski isn’t Gibbs’ first vehicle. That honor belongs to the three-seat Aquada, which debuted in 2003 and goes 100 mph on land and 30 mph in the water. Virgin Group CEO Richard Branson used an Aquada in 2004 when he set an amphibious vehicle speed record crossing the English Channel.

But the Aquada never went on sale. First its engine supplier, Rover, went out of business. Then U.S. safety regulators wouldn’t approve it for street use because of several safety issues. The government insisted on air bags, for example, even though Gibbs argued that they might deploy every time the Aquada hit a large wave.

Gibbs Sports Amphibians hopes to turn things around with the Quadski, which has fewer safety requirements because it’s an ATV. The company’s target customers are outdoor sportsmen as well as first responders.

The Quadski will come in five colors and will be available at power sports dealers, concentrated in Florida, Texas, the New York to Boston corridor and the Great Lakes region.

Haywire speedometer probably needs new instrument cluster

Dear Tom and Ray: I’ve had this 2001 Chevy Cavalier for almost five years. It’s been a fantastic car. I take care of it, and it takes care of me.

Here’s the problem: Every year when the temperature starts to drop, my speedometer goes haywire. The outside temp only has to drop into the 40s for this to start. Morning, afternoon, evening — it doesn’t matter.

One minute I’m right on the speed limit, the next it’s saying I’m doing 110 mph. I can be at a stoplight, and the speedometer still will read somewhere between 20 and 100 mph or higher.

Doing the math on the interstate and side roads to calculate my true speed is really starting to irritate me. What could be causing this, and how can I fix it?

— Mary

Tom: You can fix it with a new instrument cluster, Mary.

Ray: This particular instrument cluster uses little stepper motors for the speedometer and tachometer. And because those two gauges get the most use, they tend to fail first.

Tom: There’s no speedometer cable in this car. Information about the car’s speed is sent to the speedometer by the vehicle speed sensor, or VSS. But it’s very unlikely that a bad VSS would cause these particular symptoms.

Ray: I’m guessing you’re going to have to get your instrument cluster repaired or replaced.

Tom: Getting a new one from your Chevy dealer will cost you hundreds of dollars. But you don’t need to buy a new one — after all, the rest of the car is more than a decade old.

Ray: I’d look for a mechanic who’s willing to source one for you from a junkyard.

problem, since it’s a fairly common complaint.

Tom: But your mechanic can at least get a warranty on the part so that if it turns out to be faulty, he can go back and get you another one. You’d still owe him for some additional labor, but not too much, since he’d be able to test the part before putting the car back together.

Ray: And given the age of the car, a used instrument cluster will take this car either into deep old age or until something much more serious breaks. Good luck, Mary.

Tom and Ray share secrets on how you can save tens of thousands of dollars on your cars over the next 20 years in their pamphlet “Should I Buy, Lease, or Steal My Next Car?” Send $4.75 (check or money order) to Next Car, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Microsoft becomes friend, foe to PC partners

■ Release of their new tablet goes head-to-head with hardware makers

By Ryan Nakashima
AP business writer

LOS ANGELES — With the launch of its Surface tablet computer, Microsoft is becoming a genuine “frenemy” — part friend, part enemy — to its longtime manufacturing partners.

Since its founding 37 years ago, the Redmond, Wash., company has had a mutual understanding with makers of computer hardware: Microsoft creates software. Companies such as Dell, HP, Acer and Lenovo pay Microsoft a licensing fee to place the Windows operating system on the desktop PCs, notebooks and other gadgets they market to consumers.

Now, Microsoft is complicating the cozy relationship by making and marketing its own tablet computer. The company announced Tuesday that the Surface will start at $499 when it goes on sale Oct. 26. The new tablet is set to invigorate an already hotly contested market for touch-screen computers. But for first time, Microsoft will be in head-to-head competition with partners that help generate sales for its $14 billion-a-year Windows software business.

Microsoft is no stranger to manufacturing hardware, but it usually does so in businesses that are sideshows to its mainstay computer software. It has made the Xbox game console since 2001, for instance. It also made the Zune music player and Kin line of phones, although both were short-lived.

CEO Steve Ballmer insists Microsoft Corp. must move into manufacturing to bring consumers “delightful, seamless experiences” that they can enjoy “right out of the box,” according to a letter he wrote to shareholders recently.

Of course, it's not just for the sake of consumers. The strategy of making both gadgets and software could pay off for Microsoft, too.

The company is coming out with a new version of Windows next week, one that is optimized for touch-screen devices and will run on tablets and PCs. Every time it sells a Surface, analysts say, Microsoft will record some revenue for the Windows 8 operating system. Manufacturers that build competing Windows 8 tablets will pay Microsoft a fee, estimated between $30 and $80 per device.

That's a big expense, especially considering that manufacturers are allowed to use Google Inc.'s Android operating system for tablets and smartphones for free. The extra cost of making Windows 8 tablets could put Microsoft's partners at a disadvantage in a cut-throat tablet market.

“It's always tough when you're competing with your partners,” says Shaw Wu, an analyst with Sterne Agee. “That's what Microsoft has decided to do.”

The expense also comes at a time when tablet prices are dropping.

In the past few months, Google Inc. and Amazon.com Inc. have undermined tablet leader Apple Inc. with 7-inch-screen tablets using Android. The cheapest goes for $159, which barely covers manufacturing costs.

Apple, too, is expected to downsize its iPads with a mini version that might also give consumers a less expensive tablet option ahead of the holidays.

Having a product that is priced well above these smaller offerings will give Microsoft's partners a better chance to make a profit. The downside? Windows tablets may be too expensive to become a popular stocking stuffer this Christmas.

FROM THE COVER

shop, though not dead, has lost its luster since the financial crisis. Many banks, Citi included, were so sprawling they didn't even know the risks they had assumed.

As the housing market imploded, Citi lost $32 billion in 2008, according to FactSet, a financial data provider. Nearing collapse, the bank took $45 billion in government money.

The government converted $25 billion into an ownership stake, which it sold in December 2010 for a $12 billion profit. Citigroup had repaid the other $20 billion in December 2009.

In a conference call last week with analysts who admitted they were puzzled by Pandit's sudden departure, O'Neill would say only that the CEO submitted his resignation and the board accepted.

The New York Times and The Wall Street Journal reported that Pandit was essentially ousted by the board after the shareholder vote on his pay, the failure to pass the Fed's standards for raising the dividend, and a writedown of Citigroup's stake in a joint venture with Morgan Stanley.

SON
from 1D

name, and Sony Corp. co-founders Akio Morita and Masaru Ibuka.

Son invented a pocket translator while at Berkeley, which was later bought for $1 million by Japanese electronics maker Sharp Corp.

He returned to Japan and used the money to start Softbank in 1981. In its very early days, Softbank sold computer software and then branched into publishing. Since then, it has grown into an empire of Web and mobile businesses.

Son acknowledged he had grown conservative over the past two years as Softbank paid back debt from earlier acquisitions. He didn't like that change in himself. He decided he was ready to take new risks.

"Taking up a challenge always entails a big risk," Son, 55, said at a joint news conference last week with Sprint's chief executive Dan Hesse.

Son started making headlines in the 1990s with his aggressive acquisitions of companies, which eventually included the Japan

O'Neill gave few details about how the bank may change after Pandit. But he did note that it will be "extraordinarily focused on our expense level."

Some analysts speculated the bank may place less emphasis on Wall Street trading and helping companies sell stocks and bonds to the public, the so-called investment banking in which Pandit had expertise. The business is volatile, with blockbuster profits occasionally followed by big losses.

Instead, the focus could shift to commercial banking, what Daniel Alpert, managing partner of Westwood Capital, calls the "dull and boring" businesses of lending to companies and consumers.

Dick Bove, a bank analyst at Rochdale Securities, thinks Citi will not only emphasize commercial banking, but will shift focus more overseas where the bank faces fewer rivals and could charge higher interest rates.

"If you look at domestic commercial banking, you have lower interest rates, you have higher losses, you have regulation and a high degree of competition," he said. "If you go overseas, you don't have any of those. You have tremendous growth."

Citi manages 200 million accounts with customers in 160 countries.

Corbat also spoke to analysts on the conference call but, as was the case with O'Neill, gave little indication how Citi might change. Corbat has worked at Citi and its predecessors since he graduated from Harvard in 1983.

Pandit's resignation came a day after the bank announced what many analysts had hailed as terrific earnings for the third quarter.

"It feels very abrupt to us," one analyst, Mike Mayo of CLSA, said on the conference call. "We're all scratching our heads, and thinking, 'What just happened?'"

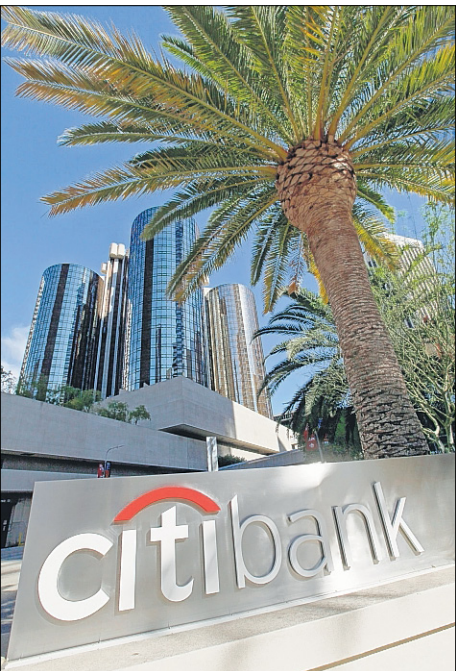

O'Neill replied, "What happened is Vikram submitted his resignation."

Pandit is credited with not only slimming the bank, but removing it from government ownership after the bailout and righting its balance sheet after billions in losses on bad mortgage investments made before he took the helm.

But he came under criticism for not cutting expenses enough last year.

"You're in a recovery mode, and the last thing you should do is make investments that retard that," said Second Curve's Brown of the bank's 2011 investments overseas and in branches. "Last year was terrible."

Said Cassidy: "I don't know if (Pandit) was pushed out or quit, but I don't think he was following the game plan of O'Neill."

units of Yahoo and Vodafone. He became a household name by pushing broadband services more than a decade ago, when the Internet was still relatively new in Japan.

He then shifted his focus to the mobile Internet.

Son has always stuck out in a nation of "salaryman presidents," where decision making is customarily done by a team and the man at the top — as it is almost always a man — rose through the ranks by not rocking the boat.

Since the nuclear disaster last year in Fukushima, northeastern Japan, Son has also been unusual in speaking out against nuclear power.

While regular people are taking to the streets in droves protesting pro-nuclear policy, the business community which includes nuclear-plant manufacturers such as Toshiba Corp. and Hitachi Inc., has largely stayed a nuclear advocate. Son is behind solar panel projects to encourage green energy as an alternative to atomic power.

Son has never made secret of his Korean ancestry, which has historically led to tragic discrimination in Japan, the colonial occupier of the Korean peninsula until 1945. Taunting in schools and difficulty in finding jobs and marriage partners are common experiences for the descendants of Korean immigrants. Two years ago, Son made his downtrodden minority roots a central theme in a company presentation that was a tearful but proud homage to his family.

Japan has its share of successes from poor or minority backgrounds. But because Japanese culture frowns upon diversity and pushes homogeneity, such people rarely talk about it as a positive part of their success.

"This is someone who is very, very precious to me," Son told a packed hall in 2010 as he outlined the company's 30-year strategy, showing on a huge screen a fading black-and-white photograph of a woman, smiling in a dress. "She is my grandmother."

She emigrated when she was 14, married his much older grandfather, and raised hogs in an impoverished part of Kyushu, the third largest of the islands that make up Japan. As a child, Son was happy to ride around on a wheelbarrow filled with scraps for the pigs.

His family's circumstances improved over the years, shifting from raising hogs to running a restaurant, but Son began to feel ashamed of his Korean background as he grew older and even rejected his grandmother. He took on a Japanese name.

It was not until his decision to attend high school in the U.S. at age 16 that he vowed to become an entrepreneur, seeing it as a way to create a more inclusive world, he said at the end of his two-hour presentation, fighting tears.

Against that backdrop, Son triumphantly declared last week that with the Sprint deal his company had truly beaten Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Corp., a former government monopoly and an iconic symbol of old Japan, and was on its way, he hoped, to No. 1 mobile company in the world. The combination of Softbank and Sprint will be the world's No. 3 mobile company by revenue.

Q It seems Jennifer Aniston and Sarah Jessica Parker are really trying to make the leap from small screen to big screen. Do you think either will become a top-rank film star?—C. Davis, Detroit, Mich.

A It's too early to tell. Aniston, 37, and Parker, 41, have the pick of parts for actresses in their age range but have yet to prove they can open a film on their own. Both still seem more effective working as part of an ensemble than as leading ladies.

Q As a fan of CBS' NUMB3RS, I'm curious about David Krumholtz. Is he really a math genius?—Kathy Hess, Allentown, Pa.
